clays are very subject to. Mortimer.
- GORBELLY. n. f. [from gor, dung, and belly, according to Skinner and Junius. It may perhaps come from gor, Welsh, beyond, too much; or, as seems to me more likely, may be contracted from germand, or gorman's belly, the belly of a glutton.] A big paunch; a swelling belly.
A term of reproach for a fat man.
- GORBELLIED. adj. [from gorbelly.] Fat;
bigbellied; having swelling paunches.
Hang ye, gorbellied knaves, are you undone? No ye fat chuffs, I would your store were here. Shaksp.
- GORD. n. f. An instrument of gaming, as appears from Beaumont and Fletcher.
Warburton.
Thy dry bones can reach at nothing now, but gords and ninepins. Beaumont and Fletcher.
Let vultures gripe thy guts; for gords and Fulham holds. Shaksp.
- GORE. n. f. [gone, Saxon.] gôr, Welsh.]
sanguinous matter.
1. Blood effused from the body.
A grievous wound,
From which forth gush'd a stream of goré blood thick,
That all her goodly garment stain'd around,
And into a deep sanguine dy'd the grassy ground. Spenser.
Another's crimes the youth unhappy bore,
Glutting his father's eyes with guiltless gore. Dryden.
2. Blood clotted or congealed.
The bloody fact
Will be aveng'd; though here thou see him die Rolling in dust and gore. Milton's Paradise Lost.
His horrid beard and knotted tresses stood Stiff with his gore, and all his wounds ran blood. Denham.
- TO GORE. v. a. [geberian, Saxon.]
1. To stab; to pierce.
Oh, let no noble eye profane a tear
For me, if I be gor'd with Mowbray's spear. Shaksp.
No weaker lion's by a stronger slain;
Nor from his largest tusks the forest boar Commission takes his brother swine to gore. Tate.
For arms his men long pikes and jav'lines bore,
And poles with pointed steel their foes in battle gore. Dryden.
2. To pierce with a horn.
Some tof'd, some gor'd, some trampling down he kill'd. Dryden.
He idly butting, feigns
His rival gor'd in every knotty trunk. Thomf. Spring.
- GORGE. n. f. [gorge, French.]

1. The throat; the swallow.
There were birds also made so finely, that they did not only deceive the sight with their figures, but the hearing with their songs, which the watry instruments did make their gorge deliver. Sidney.
And now how abhorred in my imagination it is?
my gorge rises at it. Shakespeare's Hamlet.
Her delicate tenderness will find itself abused, begin to heave the gorge, disrelish and abhor the Moor. Shakespeare's Othello.
2. That which is gorged or swallowed. Not in use.
And all the way most like a brutish beast,
He spewed up his gorge, that all did him detest. Spenser.
- TO GORGE. v. n. [gorger, French.]
1. To fill up the throat; to glut; to satiate.
Being with his presence glutted, gorg'd and full. Shakespeare.
He that makes his generation messes,
To gorge his appetite. Shaksp. King Lear.
Gorge with my blood thy barbarous appetite. Dryd.
I desire that they will not gorge the lion either with nonsense or obscenity. Addison.
Nor would his slaughter'd army now have lain
On Africk's sands, distigur'd with their wounds,
To gorge the wolves and vultures of Numidia. Addison.
The giant, gorg'd with flesh, and wine, and blood,
And stretcht at length, and snoring in his den. Addison.
2. To swallow: as, the fish has gorged the hook.
- GORGED. adj. [from gorge.] Having a gorge or throat.
Look up a height, the shrill gorg'd lark so far Cannot be seen or heard. Shakespeare.
- GORGEOUS. adj. [gorgias, old French.
Skinner.] Fine; splendid; glittering in various colours; showy; magnificent.
O, that deceit should dwell
In such a gorgeous palace. Shak. Romeo and Juliet.
As full of spirit as the month of May,
And gorgeous as the sun at Midsummer. Shaksp.
He had them look upon themselves and upon their enemies, themselves dreadful, their enemies gorgeous and brave. Hayward.
The gorgeous East, with richest hand,
Pours on her kings barbaric pearl and gold. Milton.
With gorgeous wings, the marks of sov'reign sway,
The two contending princes make their way. Dryden.
- GORGEOUSLY. adj. [from gorgeous.] Splendidly; magnificently; finely.
The duke, one solemn day gorgeously clad in a suit all over spread with diamonds, lost one of them of good value. Wotton.
- GORGEOUSNESS. n. f. [from gorgeous.]
Splendour; magnificence; show.
- GORGET. n. f. [from gorge.] The piece of armour that defends the throat.
He with a palsy fumbling on his gorget,
Shakes in and out the rivet. Shak. Troilus and Cressida.
He did oftentimes spend the night in the church alone praying, his headpiece, gorget, and gauntlets lying by him. Kneller.
See how his gorget peers above his gown,
To tell the people in what danger he was. Ben Jonson.
About his neck a threefold gorget,
As rough as trebled leathern target. Hudibras.
- GORGON. n. f. [gorgon.] A monster with snaky hairs, of which the sight turned beholders to stone; any thing ugly or horrid.
Gorgons and hydrae, and chimeras dire. Milton.
Why didst thou not encounter man for man,
And try the virtue of that gorgon face
To stare me into stature. Dryden.
- GORMAND. n. f. [gourmand, French.]
A greedy eater; a ravenous luxurious feeder.
- TO GORMANDIZE. v. n. [from gormand.]
To eat greedily; to feed ravenously.

GO'RY. adj. [from gore.]

1. Covered with congealed blood.

When two boars with rankling malice met,
Their gory sides the fresh wounds fiercely fret. Spenser.
Why do'st thou shake thy gory locks at me?
Thou can'st not say I did it. Shakespeare. Macbeth.

2. Bloody; murderous; fatal. Not in use.

The obligation of our blood forbids
A gory emulation 'twixt us twain. Shakespeare.

GO'SHAWK. n. s. [gor, goose, and hawc, a hawk.] A hawk of a large kind.

Such dread his awful visage on them cast;
So seem poor doves at goshawks sight aghast. Fairfax.

GO'SLING. n. s. [from goose.]

1. A young goose; a goose not yet full grown.

Why do you go nodding and wagging so like a fool,
as if you were hipshot? says the goose to her gosling.
L'Estrange.

Nature hath instructed even a brood of goslings to stick together, while the kite is hovering over their heads. Swift.

2. A katkin on nut-trees and pines.

GO'SPEL. n. s. [goder spel, or God's or good tidings; euangelion; sofkel, sheal suach, happy tidings, Erse.]

1. God's work; the holy book of the Christian revelation.

Thus may the gospel to the rising sun
Be spread, and flourish where it first begun. Waller.

All the decrees whereof Scripture treateth are conditionate, receiving Christ as the gospel offers him, as Lord and Saviour; the former, as well as the latter, being the condition of scripture-election, and the rejecting, or not receiving him thus, the condition of the scripture-reprobation. Hammond.

How is a good Christian animated and cheered by a steadfast belief of the promises of the gospel? Bentley.

2. Divinity; theology.

To GO'SPEL. v. n. [from the noun.] To fill with sentiments of religion. This word in Shakespeare, in whom alone I have found it, is used, though so venerable in itself, with some degree of irony: I suppose from the gospellers, who had long been held in contempt.

Are you so gospell'd

To pray for this good man, and for his issue,
Whose heavy hand hath bow'd you to the grave?
Shakespeare.

GO'SPELLER. n. s. [from gospel.] A name of the followers of Wickliffe, who first attempted a reformation from popery, given them by the Papists in reproach, from their professing to follow and preach only the gospel.

These gospellers have had their golden days,
Have trodden down our holy Roman faith. Rowe.

GO'SSAMER. n. s. [gossipium, low Latin.]

The down of plants; the lung white cobwebs which fly in the air in calm sunny weather, especially about the time of Autumn. Hanmer.

A lover may bestride the gossamer,

That idles in the wanton Summer air,
And yet not fall, so light is vanity. Shakespeare.

Four nimble gnats the horses were,
Their harnesses of gossamer. Drayton's Nymphid.

The filmy gossamer now sits no more,
Nor halcyons bask on the short sunny shore. Dryden.

GO'SSIP. n. s. [from god and ryb, relation, affinity; Saxon.]

1. One who answers for the child in baptism.

Go to a gossip's feast and gaudy with me,
After so long grief such nativity. Shakespeare.

At the christening of George Duke of Clarence, who was born in the castle of Dublin, he made both the Earl of Kildare and the Earl of Ormond his gossips. Davies on Ireland.

2. A tipling companion.

And sometimes lurk I in a gossip's bowl,
In very likeness of a roasted crab,
And when she drinks against her lips I bob. Shakespeare.

3. One who runs about tattling like women at a lying-in.

To do the office of a neighbour,
And be a gossip at his labour. Hudibras.

'Tis sung in ev'ry street,
The common chat of gossips when they meet. Dryden.

To GOSSIP. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To chat; to prate: to be merry.

Go to a gossip's feast and gaudy with me.
—With all my heart, I'll gossip at this feast. Shakespeare.

His mother was a votress of my order,
And, in the spiced Indian air by night,
Full often hath she gossiped by my side. Shakespeare.

The market and exchange must be left to their own ways of talking; and gossippings not be robbed of their ancient privilege. Locke.

He gives himself up to an idle gossipping conversation. Law.

2. To be a pot companion.

Nor met with fortune, other than at feast,
Full warm of blood, of mirth of gossipping. Shakespeare.

GO'SSIPRED. n. s. [gossipry, from gossip.]

Gossipred or compaternity, by the canon law, is a spiritual affinity; and the juror, that was gossip to either of the parties, might, in former times, have been challenged as not indifferent. Davies.

GO'STING. n. s. [rubia.] An herb. Ainsworth.

GO'T. pret. [from the verb get.]

Titus Lartius writes, they fought together; but Aufidius got off. Shakespeare. Coriolanus.

If you have strength Achilles' arms to bear, Though foul Therites got thee, thou shalt be Lov'd and esteem'd. Dryden's Juvenal.

These regions and this realm my wars have got;
This mournful empire is the loser's lot. Dryden.

When they began to reason about the means how the sea got thither, and away back again, there they were presently in the dark. Woodward's Nat. Hist.

GO'T. part. pass. of get.

Solyman commended them for their valour in their evil haps, in a plot so well by them laid, more than he did the victory of others got by good fortune, not grounded upon any good reason. Knolles.

A gentle persuasion in reasoning, when the first point of submission to your will is got, will most times do. Locke.

If he behaves himself so when he depends on us for his daily bread, can any man say what he will do when he is got above the world? Arbutnot.

Thou wert from Aetna's burning entrails torn,
Got by fierce whirlwinds, and in thunder born. Pope.

GO'TTEN. part. pass. of get.

Wisdom cannot be gotten for gold. Job, xxviii. 15.

Few of them, when they are gotten into an office, apply their thoughts to the execution of it. Temple.

GOUD. n. s. Woad: a plant. DiC.

GOVE. n. s. A mow. Tusser.

To GOVE. v. n. To mow; to put in a gove, goff, or mow. An old word.

Load safe, carry home, follow time being fair,
Gove just in the barn, it is out of despair. Tusser.

To GO'VERN. v. a. [gouverner, French; guberno, Latin.]

1. To rule as a chief magistrate.

This inconvenience is more hard to be redressed in the governor than the governed; as a malady in a vital part is more incurable than in an external. Spenser on Ireland.

Slaves to our passions we become, and then
It grows impossible to govern men. Waller.

2. To regulate; to influence; to direct.

I am at present against war, though it puts the power into my hands, and though such turbulent and naughty spirits as you are, govern all things in times of peace. Davenant.

The chief point, which he is to carry always in his eye, and by which he is to govern all his counsels, designs, and actions. Atterbury.

3. To manage; to restrain.

Go after her, she's desperate; govern her. Shakespeare.

4. [In grammar.] To have force with regard to syntax: as, amo governs the accusative case.

Listen, children, unto me,
And let this your lesson be,
In our language evermore
Words that govern go before. Mauger's Fr. Gram.

5. To pilot; to regulate the motions of a ship.

To GO'VERN. v. n. To keep superiority; to behave with haughtiness.

By that rule,
Your wicked atoms may be working now
To give bad counsel, that you still may govern. Dryden.

GO'VERNABLE. adj. [from govern.] Submissive to authority; subject to rule; obedient; manageable.

The flexibility of the former part of a man's age, not yet grown up to be headstrong, makes it more governable and safe. Locke.

GO'VERNANCE. n. s. [from govern.]

1. Government; rule; management.

Jonathan took the governance upon him at that time, and rose up instead of his brother Judas. 1 Sac. ix. 31.

2. Controul, as that of a guardian.

Me he knew not, neither his own ill,
'Till through wise handling, and fair governance,
I him recurred to a better will. Spenser.

What! shall King Henry be a pupil still,
Under the surly Gloster's governance? Shakespeare.

3. Behaviour; manners. Obsolete.

He likest is to fall into mischance
That is regardless of his governance. Spenser.

GO'VERNANT. n. s. [gouvernante, French.]

A lady who has the care of young girls of quality. The more usual and proper word is governess.

GO'VERNESS. n. s. [gouvernereffe, old French, from gove.]

1. A female invested with authority.

The moon, the governess of floods,
Pale in her anger, washes all the air,
That rheumatick diseases do abound. Shakespeare.

2. A tutress; a woman that has the care of young ladies.

He presented himself unto her, falling down upon both his knees, and holding up his hands, as the old governess of Danae is painted, when she suddenly saw the golden shower. Sidney.

His three younger children were taken from the governess in whose hands he put them. Clarendon.

3. A tutress; an instructress; a directress.

Great affliction that severe governess of the life of man brings upon those souls she seizes on. Mure against Atheism.

GO'VERNMENT. n. s. [gouvernement, Fr.]

1. Form of a community with respect to the disposition of the supreme authority.

There seem to be but two general kinds of government in the world: the one exercised according to the arbitrary commands and will of some single person; and the other according to certain orders or laws introduced by agreement or custom, and not to be changed without the consent of many. Temple.

No government can do any act to limit itself: the supreme legislative power cannot make itself not to be absolute. Locke.

2. An established state of legal authority.

There they shall found
Their government, and their great senate chuse
Through the twelve tribes, to rule by laws ordain'd. Milton.

While

G O U

While he survives, in concord and content
The commons live, by no division rent;
But the great monarch's death dissolves the govern- ment. Dryden.

Every one knows, who has considered the nature of government, that there must be in each particular form of it an absolute unlimited power. Addison.

Where any one person or body of men seize into their hands the power in the last resort, there is properly no longer a government, but what Aristotle and his followers call the abuse or corruption of one.
Swift.

3. Administration of publick affairs.

Safety and equal government are things
Which subjects make as happy as their kings. Waller.

Those governments which curb not evils, cause;
And a rich knave's a libel on our laws. Young.

4. Regularity of behaviour. Not in use.

You needs must learn, lord, to amend this fault;
Though sometimes it shews greatness, courage, blood,
Yet oftentimes it doth present harsh rage,
Defect of manners, want of government,

Pride, haughtiness, opinion, and disdain. Shakesp.

'Tis government that makes them seem divine;

The want thereof makes thee abominable. Shakesp.

5. Manageableness; compliance; obsequiousness.

Thy eyes windows fall,
Like death, when he shuts up the day of life;
Each part depriv'd of supple government,
Shall stiff and stark, and cold appear, like death.
Shakespeare.

6. Management of the limbs or body. Obsolete.

Their god
Shot many a dart at me with fierce intent;
But I them warded all with wary government. Spenser.

7. [In grammar.] Influence with regard to construction.

GO'VERNOUR. n. f. [gouverneur, French.]

1. One who has the supreme direction.

It must be confessed, that of Christ, working as a creator and a governour of the world by providence, all are partakers. Hooker.

They beget in us a great idea and veneration of the mighty author and governour of such stupendous bodies, and excite and elevate our minds to his adoration and praise. Bentley.

2. One who is invested with supreme authority in a state.

For the kingdom is the Lord's and he is the go- vernour among the nations. Pf. xxii. 28.

The magistrate cannot urge obedience upon such potent grounds as the minister, if so disposed, can urge disobedience: as, for instance, if my governour should command me to do a thing, or I must die, or forfeit my estate; and the minister steps in and tells me, that I offend God, and ruin my soul, if I obey that command, 'tis easy to see a greater force in this persuasion. South.

3. One who rules any place with delegated and temporary authority.

To you, lord governour,
Remains the censure of this bellish villain. Shakesp.

4. A tutor; one who has care of a young man.

To Eltam will I, where the young king is,
Being ordain'd his special governour;
And for his safety there I'll best devise. Shakesp.

The great work of a governour is to fashion the carriage, and form the mind; to settle in his pupil good habits, and the principles of virtue and wisdom.
Locke.

During the minority of kings, the election of bishops, and other affairs of the church, must be left in the hands of their governours and courtiers.
Lefley.

5. Pilot; regulator; manager.

Behold all the ships, which though they be so great, and are driven of fierce winds, yet they are turned about with a very small helm, whithersoever
the governour listeth. Ja. iii. 4.

GOUGE. n. f. [French.] A chissel having a round edge, for the cutting of such wood as is to be rounded or hollowed.

G O W

Go'ujeres. n. f. [gouje, French; a camp trull.] The French disease. Moxon. Hammer.

Gouuro. n. f. [gouhorde, French.]

1. A plant. The fruit of some species are long, of others round, or bottle shaped.

Miller.

But I will haste, and from each bough and brake,
Each plant, and juiciest gourd, will pluck such choice
To entertain our angel-guest. Milton's Par. Lost.

Gourd seeds abound so much in oil, that a sweet and pleasant one may be drawn from thence by expression; they are of the four greater cold seeds, and are used in emulsions. Hill.

2. A bottle [from gourt, old French.

Skinner.] The large fruit so called is often scooped hollow, for the purpose of containing and carrying wine, and other liquors: from thence any leathern bottle grew to be called by the same name, and so the word is used by Chaucer. Hammer.

*Gou'rdiness. n. f. [from gourd.] A swelling in a horse's leg after a journey.*

Farrier's Dict.

Gournet. n. f. [cuculus.] A fish.

Gout. n. f. [goutte, French.]

1. The arthritis; a periodical disease attended with great pain.

The gout is a disease which may affect any membraneous part, but commonly those which are at the greatest distance from the heart or the brain, where the motion of the fluids is the slowest, the resistance, friction, and stricture of the solid parts the greatest, and the sensation of pain, by the dilacera-tion of the nervous fibres, extreme. Arbutnot on Diet.

One that's sick o' th' gout, had rather Groan so in perplexity, than be cur'd
By the sure physician death. Shak. Cymbeline.

This very reverend lecher, quite worn out
With rheumatism, and crippled with his gout, Forgets what he in youthful times has done
And swings his own vices in his son. Dryden.

2. A drop. [goutte, French; gutta, Latin.] Gut for drop is still used in Scot. and by physicians.

I see thee still,

And on the blade o' th' dudgeon gouts of blood,
Which was not so before. Shakesp. Macbeth

GOUT. n. f. [French.] A taste. An affected cant word.

Catalogues serve for a direction to any one that has a gout for the like studies. Woodward on Fossils.

Go'utwort. n. f. [gout and wort, poda-graria.] An herb. Ainsworth.

*Go'uty. adj. [from gout.]*

1. Afflicted or diseased with the gout.

There dies not above one of a thousand of the gout, although I believe that more die gouty. Graunt.

Knots upon his gouty joints appear,
And chalk is in his crippled fingers found. Dryden.

Most commonly a gouty constitution is attended with great acuteness of parts, the nervous fibres, both in the brain and the other extremities, being delicate. Arbutnot on Diet.

2. Relating to the gout.

There are likewise other causes of blood spitting;
one is the settlement of a gouty matter in the substance of the lungs. Blackmore.

GOWN. n. f. [gonna, Italian; gown, Welsh and Erse.]

1. A long upper garment.

They make garments either short, as cloaks, or,
as gowns, long to the ground. Abbot.

If ever I said a loosebodied gown, sew me up in the skirts of it, and beat me to death with a bottom of brown thread; I said a gown. Shakesp.

In length of train descends her sweeping gown,
And by her graceful walk the queen of love is known.
Dryden.

G R A

2. A woman's upper garment.

I despise your new gown, 'till I see you dressed in it. Pope.

3. The long habit of a man dedicated to acts of peace, as divinity, medicine, law.

The benefices themselves are so mean in Irish counties, that they will not yield any competent maintenance for an honest minister, scarcely to buy him a gown. Spenser on Ireland.

Girt in his Gabin gown the hero sat. Dryden.

Yet not superior to her sex's carcs,

The mode she fixes by the gown she wears;

Of silks and china she's the last appeal;

In these great points she loads the common weal.
Young.

4. The dress of peace.

He Mars depos'd, and arms to gowns made yield;
Successful councils did him soon approve

As fit for close intrigues as open field. Dryden.

*Go'wned. adj. [from gown.] Dressed in a gown.*

A noble crew about them waited round

Of sage and sober peers, all gravely gown'd. Spenser.

In velvet white as snow the troop was gown'd,

The seams with sparkling emeralds set around.
Dryden.

Go'wnman. n. f. [gown and man.] A man devoted to the arts of peace; one whose proper habit is a gown.

Let him with pedants

Pore out his life amongst the lazy gownmen. Rowe.

Thus will that whole bench, in an age or two,
be compos'd of mean, sawning gownmen, dependants upon the court for a morsel of bread. Swift.

*To GRA'BBLE. v. n. [probably corrupted from grapple.] To grope; to feel eagerly with the hands.*

My blood chills about my heart at the thought of these rogues, with their bloody hands grabbling
in my guts, and pulling out my very entrails.

Arbutnot's John Bull.

To GRA'BBLE. v. a. To lie prostrate on the ground. Ainsworth.

GRACE. n. f. [grace, French; gratia, Latin; graace, Erse.]

1. Favour; kindness.

If the highest love in no base person may aspire to grace, then may I hope your beauty will not be without pity. Sidney.

O momentary grace of mortal men,

Which we more hunt for than the grace of God!

Shakesp.

Such as were popular,

And well deserving, were advanc'd by grace. Daniel.

Is this the reward and thanks I am to have for those many acts of grace I have lately pass'd?

King Charles.

Yet those remov'd,

Such grace shall one just man find in his sight,

That he relents, not to blot out mankind. Milton.

He receiv'd all the graces and degrees, the protorship and the doctorship could be obtained there.

Clarendon.

Or each, or all, may win a lady's grace;

Then either of you knights may well deserve

A princess born. Dryden's Fablet.

None of us, who now your grace implore

But held the rank of sov'reign queen before. Dryden.

Proffer'd service I repaid the fair,

That of her grace she gave her maid to know

The secret meaning of this moral show. Dryden.

A military vest of purple flow'd,
 Livelier than melibæan, or the grain
 Of sarra, worn by kings and heroes old. Milton.

Come, penfive nun, devout and pure,
 All in a robe of darkest grain,
 Flowing with majestick train. Milton.

The third, his feet

Shadow'd from either heel with feather'd mail, Sky-tinctur'd grain! Milton's Paradise Lost.

12. Temper; disposition; inclination; humour from the direction of fibres.

Your minds, pre-occupied with what
 You rather must do than with what you should do,
 Made you against the grain to voice him consul. Shakespeare.

Quoth Hudibras, it is in vain,
 I see, to argue 'gainst the grain. Hudibras.

Old clients, weary'd out with fruitless care,
 Dismiss their hopes of eating, and despair;
 Though much against the grain, forc'd to retire,
 Buy roots for supper, and provide a fire. Dryden.

13. The heart; the bottom.

The one being tractable and mild, the other stiff and impatient of a superior, they lived but in cunning concord, as brothers glued together, but not united in grain. Hayward.

14. The form of the surface with regard to roughness and smoothness.

The smaller the particles of cutting substances are,
 the smaller will be the scratches by which they continually fret and wear away the glass until it be polished; but be they never so small, they can wear away the glass no otherwise than by grating and scratching it, and breaking the protuberances; and therefore polish it no otherwise than by breaking its roughness to a very fine grain, so that the scratches and frettings of the surface become too small to be visible. Newton's Opticks.

GRAINED. adj. [from grain.] Rough;
 made less smooth.

Though now this grained face of mine be hid
 In sap consuming Winter's drizzled snow, Yet hath my night of life some memory. Shakespeare.

—No farther than the Tower,
To gratulate the gentle princes there. Shaksp.

Since nature could behold so dire a crime,
I gratulate at least my native clime,
That such a land, which such a monster bore,
So far is distant from our Thracian shore. Dryden.

2. To declare joy for; to mention with expressions of joy.

Yet give thy jealous subjects leave to doubt,
Who this thy 'scape from rumour gratulate,
No less than if from peril; and devout,
Do beg thy care unto thy after state. Ben Jonson.

GRATULATION. n. s. [from gratulation, Latin.] Salutations made by expressing joy; expression of joy.

They are the first gratulations wherewith our Lord and Saviour was joyfully received at his entrance into the world, by such as in their hearts, arms, and bowels embraced him. Hooker.

The

The earth

Gave signs of gratulation, and each hill. Milton.
Your enjoyments, according to the standard of a Christian desire, require no addition: I shall turn my wishes into gratulations, and, congratulating their fulness, only wish their continuance. South.

GRA'TULATORY. adj. [from gratulate.] Congratulatory; expressing congratulation.

GRAVE, a final syllable in the names of places, is from the Saxon græf, a grove or cave. Gibson's Camden.

GRAVE. n. f. [græf, Saxon.] The place in the ground in which the dead are reposed.

Now it is the time of night,
That the graves, all gaping wide,
Every one lets forth his spirit,
In the church-way paths to glide. Shakespeare.
Thou wilt not leave me in the loathsome grave. Milton.

To walk upon the graves of our dead masters,
Is our own security. Denham's Sophy.
A flood of waters would overwhelm all those fragments which the earth broke into, and bury in one common grave all the inhabitants of the earth. Barnet.

They were wont once a year to meet at the graves of the martyrs; there solemnly to recite their sufferings and triumphs, to praise their virtues, to bless God for their pious examples, for their holy lives and their happy deaths. Nelson.

To GRAVE. v. a. preter. graven; part. pass. graven. [graver, French; graver, French.]

1. To insculp; to carve a figure or inscription in any hard substance.

Cornice with bossy sculptures graven. Milton.

Your good advice, which still hath been both grave and prosperous, in this day's council. Shakespeare.

That grave awfulness, as in your best breed of maffis, or elegance and prettiness, as in your lesser dogs, are modes of beauty. More against Albigism.

Even the grave and serious characters are distinguished by their several sorts of gravity. Dryden.

Youth on silent wings is flown;
Graver years come rolling on. Prior.

To laugh, were want of goodness and of grace;
And to be grave, exceeds all power of face. Pope.

Folly-painting humour, grave himself,
Calls laughter forth. Thomson.

They have as much reason to pretend to, and as much necessity to aspire after, the highest accomplishments of a Christian and solid virtue, as the gravest and wisest among Christian philosophers. Law.

2. Of weight; not futile; credible. Little used.

The Roman state was of all others the most celebrated for their virtue, as the gravest of their own writers, and of strangers, do bear them witness. Grew's Cosmol.

3. Not showy; not tawdry: as, a grave suit of cloaths.

4. Not sharp of sound; not acute.

Accent, in the Greek names and usage, seems to have regarded the tone of the voice; the acute accent raising the voice, in some syllables, to a higher, i. e. more acute pitch or tone, and the grave depressing it lower, and both having some emphasis, i. e. more vigorous pronunciation. Holder.

GRA'VECLOATHS. n. f. [grave and cloaths.] The dress of the dead.

But of such subtle substance and unbound,
That like a ghost he seem'd, whose grave-cloaths were unbound. Spenser.

And he that was dead came forth, bound hand and foot with grave-cloaths. Jo. xi. 44.

GRAVEL. n. f. [gravier, French; gravel, Dutch; gravel, Armorick.]

1. Hard sand; sand consisting of very small pebble-stones.

Gravel consists of flints of all the usual sizes and colours, of the several sorts of pebbles; sometimes with a few pyrites, and other mineral bodies, confusedly intermixed, and common sand. Woodward.

His armour, all gilt, was so well handled, that it shewed like a glittering sand and gravel, interlaced with silver rivers. Sidney.

Proofs as clear as founts in July, when We see each grain of gravel. Shakespeare.

Providence permitted not the earth to spend itself in base gravels and pebbles, instead of quarries of stones. More.

So deep, and yet so clear, we might behold
The gravel bottom, and that bottom gold. Dryden.

The upper garden at Kensington was at first nothing but a gravel pit. Speidlor.

Gravel walks are best for fruit-trees. Mortimer.

2. [Gravelle, French.] Sandy matter concreted in the kidneys.

If the stone is brittle it will often crumble, and pass in the form of gravel; if the stone is too big to pass, the best method is to come to a sort of composition or troac with it. Arbutnot.

To GRAVEL. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To pave or cover with gravel.

Moss groweth upon alleys, especially such as lie cold, and upon the North, as in divers terraces; and again, if they be much trodden, or if they were at the first gravelled. Bacon.

2. To stick in the sand.

William the Conqueror, when he invaded this island, chanced at his arrival to be gravelled; and one of his feet stuck so fast in the sand, that he fell to the ground. Camden.

3. To puzzle; to stop; to put to a stand; to embarrass.

I would kiss before I spoke.

—Nay, you were better speak first, and when you were gravelled for lack of matter you might take occasion to kiss. Shakespeare.

The disease itself will grave him to judge of it; nor can there be any prediction made of it, it is so sharp. Howel.

What work do our imaginations make with eternity and immensity? and how are we gravelled by their cutting dilemmas! Glanville's Scopsis.

Mat, who was here a little gravelled, Toit up his nose, and would have cavill'd. Prior.

4. [In horsemanship.] To hurt the foot with gravel confined by the shoe.

But he must wisely look, and gravely plead? Young.

2. Without gaudiness or show.

GRA'VENESS. n. f. [from grave.] Seriousness; solemnity and sobriety of behaviour.

Youth no less becomes.

The light and careless livery that it wears,
Than settled age his fables, and his weeds
Importing health and graveness. Shakespeare.

But yet beware of counsels when too full;
Number makes long disputes and graveness dull. Denham.

GRA'VEOLENT. adj. [graveolens, Latin.] Strong scented.

GRA'VEOL. comp. of grave. See GRAVE.

GRA'VEUR. n. f. [graveur, French; from grave.]

1. One whose business is to inscribe or carve upon hard substances; one who copies pictures upon wood or metal to be impressed on paper.

If he makes a design to be graved, he is to remember that the gravers dispose not their colours as the painters do; and that, by consequence, he must take occasion to find the reason of his design in the natural shadows of the figures, which he has disposed to cause the effect. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

2. The style or tool used in graving.

With all the care wherewith I tried upon it the known ways of softening gravers, I could not soften this. Boyle.

The tollsome hours in different labour slide,
Some work the file, and some the graver guide. Gay's Pan.

GRA'VEY. superl. of grave. See GRAVE.

GRA'VING. n. f. [from grave.] Carved work.

Skillful to work in gold; also to grave any manner of graving, and to find out every device which shall be put to him. 2 Chro. ii. 14.

To GRA'VITATE. v. n. [from gravis, Latin.] To tend to the centre of attraction.

Those who have nature's steps with care pursu'd,
That matter is with active force endu'd,
That all its parts magnetick pow'r exert,
And to each other gravitate assert. Blackmore.

That subtle matter must be of the same substance with all other matter, and as much as is comprehended within a particular body must gravitate jointly with that body. Bentley.

GRAVITA'TION. n. s. [from gravitate.] Act of tending to the centre.

The most considerable phenomenon belonging to the terrestrial bodies is the general action of gravitation, whereby all known bodies, in the vicinity of the earth, do tend and press towards its centre.

When the loose mountain trembles from on high,
Shall gravitation cease, if you go by? Pope.

GRA'VITY. n. s. [gravitas, Latin; gravité, French.]

1. Weight; heaviness; tendency to the centre.

That quality by which all heavy bodies tend towards the centre, accelerating their motion the nearer they approach towards it, true philosophy has shewn to be unsolvable by any hypothesis, and resolved it into the immediate will of the Creator. Of all bodies, considered within the confines of any fluid, there is a twofold gravity, true and absolute, and vulgar or comparative: absolute gravity is the whole force by which any body tends downwards; but the relative or vulgar is the excess of gravity in one body above the specific gravity of the fluid, whereby it tends downwards more than the ambient fluid doth. Quincy.

Bodies do swim or sink in different liquors, according to the tenacity or gravity of those liquors which are to support them. Brown.

Though this increase of density may at great distances be exceeding slow, yet if the elastic tone of this medium be exceeding great, it may suffice to impel bodies from the denser parts of the medium towards the rarer, with all that power which we call gravity. Newton's Opticks.

2. Atrociousness; weight of guilt.

No man could ever have thought this reasonable, that had intended thereby only to punish the injury committed, according to the gravity of the fact.

Hooker.

3. Seriousness; solemnity.

There is not a white hair on your face but should have his effect of gravity. Shakespeare. Henry IV.

Our youths and wildness shall no whit appear,
But all be buried in his gravity. Shakespeare.

For the advocates and council that plead, patience and gravity of hearing is an essential part of justice.

Bacon.

Great Cato there, for gravity renown'd. Dryden.

The emperors often jested on their rivals or predecessors, but their minds still maintained their gravity. Addison.

He will tell you with great gravity, that it is a dangerous thing for a man that has been used to get money, ever to leave it off. Law.

GRA'VY. n. s. The serous juice that runs from flesh not much dried by the fire.

Meat we love half raw, with the blood trickling down from it, delicately terming it the gravy, which in truth looks more like an ichorous or raw bloody matter. Harvey on Consumptions.

There may be stronger broth made of vegetables than of any gravy soup. Arbutnot on Aliments.

GRAY. adj. [græg, Saxon; grau, Danish;
grau, Dutch.]

1. White with a mixture of black.

They left me then, when the gray headed even,
Like a sad votarist in palmer's weed,
Rose from the hindmost wheels of Phœbus' wain. Milton.

These gray and dun colours may be also produced by mixing whites and blacks, and by consequence differ from perfect whites, not in species of colours, but only in degree of luminousness. Newton.

2. White or hoary with old age.

Living creatures generally do change their hair with age, turning to be gray; as is seen in men, though some earlier and some later; in horses, that are dappled and turn white; in old squirrels that turn grizzly, and many others. Bacon's Natural History.

Thou hast neither forsaken me now I am become gray headed, nor suffered me to forsake thee in the late days of temptation. Walton.

Anon

Gray headed men and grave, with warriors mix'd, Assemble. Milton's Paradise Lost.

The restoration of gray hairs to juvenility, and renewing the exhausted marrow, may be effected.

Glarville's Sceptis.

Gray headed infant? and in vain grown old!

Art thou to learn that in another's gold

Lie charms resistless? Dryden's Juvenal.

We most of us are grown gray headed in our dear master's service. Addison's Spectator.

Her gray hair'd synods damning books unread,
And Bacon trembling for his brazen head. Pope.

3. Dark like the opening or close of day;
of the colour of ashes.

Our women's names are more gracious than their Cecilia, that is, gray eyed. Camden's Remains.

The gray ey'd morn smiles on the frowning night,
Chequ'ring the eastern clouds with streaks of light.

Shakespeare.

I'll say yon gray is not the morning's eye;
'Tis but the pale reflex of Cynthia's brow. Shak.

Soon as the gray ey'd morning streaks the skies,
And in the doubtful day the woodcock flies. Gay.

GRAY. n. s. A gray colour.

Down sunk the sun, the closing hour of day
Came onward, mantled o'er with dusky gray.

Parnei.

GRAY. n. s. A badger. Ainsworth.

old man: in contempt.

Youngling, thou can'st not love so dear as I.

Graybeard, thy love doth freeze. Shakespeare.

Have I in conquest stretcht mine arm so far,
To be afraid to tell graybeards the truth? Shakespeare.

GRAYLING. n. s. [thymallus.] The umber, & fish.

The grayling lives in such rivers as the trout does, and is usually taken with the same baits, and after the same manner: he is of a fine shape, his flesh white, and his teeth, those little ones that he has, are in his throat. He is not so general a fish as the trout, nor so good to eat. Walton's Angler.

GRAYNESS. n. s. [from gray.] The quality of being gray.

To GRAZE. v. n. [from grafs.]

1. To eat grafs; to feed on grafs.

The greatest of my pride is to see my ewes graze, and my lambs suck. Shakespeare. As you like it.

Graze where you will, you shall not house with me.

Shakespeare.

Leaving in his fields his grazing cows,

He sought himself some hospitable house. Dryden.

The more ignoble throng

Attend their stately steps, and slowly graze along.

Dryden.

2. To supply grafs.

Physicians advise their patients to remove into airs which are plain champains, but grazing and not overgrown with heath. Bacon.

The lewens must be kept so as the water may not stay too long in the Spring; for then the ground continueth the wet, whereby it will never graze to purpose that year. Bacon.

A third sort of grazing ground is that near the sea, which is commonly very rich land. Mortimer.

3. To move on devouring.

As every state lay next to the other that was oppressed, so the fire perpetually grazed. Bacon.

4. [From rafer, French.] To touch lightly.

Mark then a bounding valour in our English,
That being dead, like to the bullets grazing,

Breaks out into a second course of mischief,

Killing in relapse of mortality. Shakespeare. Henry V.

To GRAZE. v. a.

1. To tend grazing cattle; to set cattle to feed on grafs.

Jacob graz'd his uncle Laban's sheep. Shakespeare.

O happy man, saith he, that, lo! I see

Grazing his cattle in those pleasant fields,

If he but know his good! Daniel's Civil War.

2. To feed upon.

I was at first as other beasts, that graze

The trodden herb, of abject thoughts and low. Milr.

Their steeds around,

Free from their harness, graze the flow'ry ground.

Dryden.

Some graze their land 'till Christmas, and some longer. Mortimer.

This Neptune gave him, when he gave to keep

His scaly flocks that graze the wat'ry deep. Dryden.

The lambs with waves shall graze the verdant mead.

Pope.

3. To supply with grafs.

He hath a house and a barn in repair, and a field or two to graze his cows, with a garden and orchard.

Swift.

GRA'ZER. n. s. [from graze.] One that grazes or feeds on grafs.

His flock daily crops

Their verdant dinner from the mossy turf

Sufficient: after them the cackling geese,

Close grazer, finds wherewith to ease her want.

Philips.

GRA'ZIER. n. s. [from graze.] One who feeds cattle.

All graziers prefer their cattle from meener pastures to better. Bacon.

Gentle peace, which filleth the husbandman's barns, the grazier's folds, and the tradesman's shop.

Howell.

His confusion increased when he found the alder-man's father to be a grazier. Spectator.

Of agriculture the desolation made in the country by engrossing graziers, and the great yearly importation of corn from England, are lamentable instances under what discouragement it lies. Swift.

GREASE. n. s. [graisse, French.]

1. The soft part of the fat; the oily or unctuous part of animals.

Great are thy works Jehovah, infinite

Thy pow'r! what thought can measure thee, or tongue

Relate thee! greater now in thy return,

Than from the giant angels: thee that day

Thy thunders magnified, but to create

Is greater than created to destroy.

Milton.

The great luminary,

Aloof the vulgar constellations thick,

That from his lordly eye keep distance due,

Dispenses light from far.

Milton.

Here Caesar grac'd with both Minervas shone,

Cæsar, the world's great matter, and his own.

Scipio

Great in his triumphs, in retirement great.

12. Grand of aspect; of elevated mien.

Such Dido was; with such becoming state,

Amidst the crowd, she walks serenely great.

13. Magnanimous; generous; high minded.

In her every thing was goodly and stately; yet so, that it might seem that great mindedness was but the ancient-bearer to the humbleness.

Sidney.

14. Opulent; sumptuous; magnificent.

Not Babylon,

Nor great Alcairo, such magnificence

Equall'd in all their glories.

Milton.

He disdain'd not to appear at great tables, and

This new created world, how good, how fair,

Answering his great Idea.

Milton.

16. Swelling; proud.

Solyman perceived that Vienna was not to be won with words, nor the defendants to be discouraged with great looks; wherefore he began to batter the Knolles.

17. Familiar; much acquainted. A low

word.

Those that would not censure, or speak ill of a man immediately, will talk more boldly of those that are great with them, and thereby wound their

Bacon.

18. Pregnant; teeming.

His eyes sometimes even great with tears.

Their bellies great

With swelling vanity, bring forth deceit.

Sandys.

This fly, for most he stings in heat of day,

From cattle great with young keep thou away.

19. It is added in every step of ascending or descending consanguinity: as great grandson is the son of my grandson.

I dare not yet affirm for the antiquity of our language, that our great-great-great grandfathers tongue came out of Persia.

Camden.

What we call great-great grandfather they called forthafader.

Camden's Remains.

Their holiday-cloaths go from father to son, and are seldom worn out till the second or third generation; so that 'tis common enough to see a countryman in the doublet and breeches of his great grandfather.

Addison.

20. Hard; difficult; grievous. A proverbial expression.

It is no great matter to live lovingly with good natured and meek persons.

Taylor's Devotion.

GREAT. n. s. [from the adjective.] The whole; the gross; the whole in a lump.

To let out thy harvest by great or by day,

Let this by experience lead thee the way:

By great will deceive thee with ling'ring it out,

By day will dispatch.

Tuffer's Husbandry.

It were behoveful, for the strength of the navy that no ships should be builded by the great: for by daily experience they are found to be weak and imperfect.

That greatly turn their backs upon the foe,

And to their general send a brave defiance?

Addison.

GREATNESS. n. s. [from great.]

1. Largeness of quantity or number.

2. Comparative quantity.

We can have no positive idea of any space or duration, which is not made up of and commensurate to repeated numbers of feet or yards, or days or years, and whereby we judge of the greatness of these sort of quantities.

Locke.

All absent good does not, according to the greatness it has, or is acknowledged to have, cause pain equal to that greatness, as all pain causes desire equal to itself; because the absence of good is not always a pain, as the presence of pain is.

Locke.

3. High degree of any quality.

Zeal in duties, should be proportioned to the greatness of the reward and the certainty.

Rogers.

4. High place; dignity; power; influence;

empire.

The most servile flattery is lodged most easily in the grossest capacity; for their ordinary conceit draweth a yielding to greatness, and then have they not wit to discern the right degrees of duty.

Sidney.

Farewell, a long farewell to all my greatness.

Shak.

So many

As will to greatness dedicate themselves.

Shakespeare.

I beg your greatness not to give the law

In other realms; but beaten, to withdraw.

Dryden.

ways of raising their fortune? Law.

GREEN. adj. [grun, German; græn,
Dutch.]

1. Having a colour formed commonly by compounding blue and yellow; of the colour of the leaves of trees or herbs.
'The green colour is said to be most favourable to the sight.

The general colour of plants is green, which is a colour that no flower is of: there is a greenish primrose, but it is pale and scarce a green. Bacon.
Groves for ever green. Pope.

2. Pale; sickly: from whence we call the maid's disease the green sickness, or chlorosis. Like it is Sappho's Χλωροσπανιας.

Was the hope drunk

Wherein you dress yourself? Hath it slept since?

And wakes it now to look so green and pale

At what it did so freely? Shakespeare's Macbeth.

There's never any of these demure boys come any proof, they fall into a kind of male green sickness. Shakespeare. Henry IV.

Till the green sickness and love's force betray'd
To death's remorseless arms th' unhappy maid. Garth.

3. Flourishing; fresh; undecayed: from trees in spring.

If I have any where said a green old age, I have Virgil's authority; Sed cruda deo virisque senectus.
Dryden.

4. New; fresh: as a green wound.

The door is open, fir; there lies your way:
You may be jogging while your boots are green.
Shakespeare.

Griefs are green;
And all thy friends, which thou must make thy friends,
Have but their stings and teeth newly ta'en out
Shakespeare.

In a vault,
Where bloody Tybalt, yet but green in earth, Lies festering in his shroud. Shak. Romeo and Juliet.

A man that studieth revenge keepeth his own wounds green, which otherwise would heal and do well. Bacon's Essays.

I might dilate on the temper of the people, the power, arts, and interest of the contrary party, but those are invidious topics, too green in our remembrance. Dryden.

5. Not dry.

If a spark of error have thus far prevailed falling even where the wood was green, and farthest off from any inclination unto furious attempts; must not the peril thereof be greater in men, whose minds are of themselves as dry as fowl, apt beforehand unto tumults? Hooker's Dedication.

Being an olive tree
Which late he fell'd; and being green must be Made lighter for his manage. Chapman.

Of fragility the cause is an impotency to be extended, and therefore stone is more fragil than metal, and so dry wood is more fragil than green. Bacon.

If you but consider a piece of green wood burning in a chimney, you will readily discern, in the disbanded parts of it, the four elements. Boyle.

The green do often heat the ripe, and the ripe, so heated, give fire to the green. Mortimer's Husband.

6. Not roasted; half raw.

Under this head we may rank those words which signify different ideas, by a sort of an unaccountable far-fetched analogy, or distant resemblance, that fancy has introduced between one thing and another;
as when we say the meat is green, when it is half roasted. Watts's Logick.

7. Unripe; immature; young: because fruits are green before they are ripe.

My salad days,

When I was green in judgment, cold in blood! Shak.

O charming youth, in the first op'ning page;

So many graces in so green an age. Dryden.

You'll find a difference

Between the promise of his greener days,

And these he masters now. Shakespeare. Henry V.

That, quaint in green, she shall be loose enrob'd.
Shakespeare.

But with your presence chee'd, they cease to mourn;
And walks wear fresher green at your return. Dryden.

Cinnabar, illuminated by this beam, appears of the same red colour as in day light; and if at the lens you intercept the green making and blue making rays, its redness will become more full and lively.

Let us but consider the two colours of yellow and blue, if they are mingled together in any considerable proportion, they make a green. Watts's Logick.

2. A grassy plain.

For this down-trodden equity, we tread
In warlike march these greens before your town.

Shakespeare.

O'er the smooth enamell'd green,
Where no print of step hath been,

may know by the freezing of a moistened cloth set in your greenhouse, kindle some charcoal. Evelyn.

Sometimes our road led us into several hollow apartments among the rocks and mountains, that look like so many natural greenhouses, as being always shaded with a great variety of trees and shrubs that never lose their verdure. Addison.

A kitchen garden is a more pleasant sight than the finest orangery or artificial greenhouse. Speetator.

GRE'ENISH. adj. [from green.] Somewhat green; tending to green.

With goodly greenish locks, all loose, unt'y'd,
As each had been a bride. Spenser.

Of this order the green of all vegetables seems to be, partly by reason of the intenseness of their colours, and partly because, when they wither, some of them turn to a greenish yellow. Newton.

GRE'ENLY. adv. [from green.]

1. With a greenish colour.

2. Newly; freshly.

3. Immaturely.

4. Wanly; timidly. Not in use.

partridges.

No birds of prey are gregarious. Ray on the Creation.

GREMIAL. adj. [gremium, Latin.] Pertaining to the lap. Dist.

GRENA'DE. n. f. [from pomum granatum,

Latin.] A little hollow globe or ball of iron, or other metal, about two inches and a half in diameter, which, being filled with fine powder, is set on fire by means of a small fusée fastened to the touch-hole; as soon as it is kindled, the case flies into many shatters, much to the damage of all that stand near. Harris.

GRE'NADIER. n. f. [grenadier, French, from grenade.] A tall foot-soldier, of whom there is one company in every regiment:

such men being employed to throw grenades.

Peace allays the shepherd's fear

Of wearing cap of grenadier. Gay's Pastorals.

GRENA'DO. n. f. See GRENADE.

Yet to express a Scot, to play that prize,

Not all those mouth grenades can suffice. Cleaveland.

You may as well try to quench a flaming grenade with a shell of fair water as hope to succeed. Watts.

GREUT. n. f. A kind of fossil body.

A sort of tin ore, with its greut; that is, a con-geries of crystals, or sparks of spar, of the bigness of baysalt, and of a brown shining colour immersed therein. Grew's Musæum.

GRIEF. n. f. [from grieve; griff, Welsh, probably from the English.]

1. Sorrow; trouble for something past.

I will instruct my sorrows to be proud;

For grief is proud, and makes his owner stout. Shak.

Wringing of the hands, knocking the breast, are but the ceremonies of sorrow, the pomp and ostentation of an effeminate grief, which speak not so much the greatness of the misery as the smallness of the mind. South.

The mother was so afflicted at the loss of a fine boy, who was her only son, that she died for grief of

it. Addison.

2. Grievance; harm. [Grief, French.] Not in use.

Be factious for redress of all these griefs,

And I will set this foot of mine as far

As who goes farthest. Shakep.

The king hath sent to know

The nature of your griefs, and whereupon

You conjure from the breast of civil peace

Such bold hostility? Shakep. Henry IV.

3. Pain; disease. Obsolete.

GRIE'VANCE. n. f. [from grief.]

1. A state of uneasiness. Out of use.

2. The cause of uneasiness. Used of such causes as are the effects of human conduct.

What remedy can be found against grievalances, but to bring religion into countenance, and encourage those who, from the hope of future reward, and dread of future punishment, will be moved to justice and integrity? Swift.

TO GRIEVE. v. a. [greter, French; griever,

Flemish; gravis, Latin.]

1. To afflict; to hurt.

For he doth not afflict willingly, nor grieve the children of men. Luke iii. 33.

Forty years long was I grieved with this generation. Psal.

It repented the Lord that he had made man on the earth, and it grieved him at his heart. Gen. vi.

Griev'd at the thought, he vow'd his whole endeavour

Should be to close those breaches. Rowe.

2. To make sorrowful.

When one man kills another, thinking that he killeth a wild beast; if the same man remembreth afterwards what he hath done, and is not grieved for the fact, in this case he hath sinned; because his not grieving is offensive unto God, though the fact were merely besides his will. Perkins.

TO GRIEVE. v. n. To be in pain for something past; to mourn; to sorrow, as for the death of friends. It has sometimes at and sometimes for before the cause of grief: perhaps at is proper before our misfortunes, and for before our faults.

Do not you grieve at this. Shakep. Henry IV.

How didst thou grieve then, Adam, to behold

The end of all thy offspring end so sad. Milton.

With equal mind what happens let us bear;

Nor joy nor grieve too much for things beyond our care. Dryden.

GRIE'VINGLY. adv. [from grieve.] In sorrow; sorrowfully.

Grievingly, I think,

The

G R I

The peace between the French and us not values
The cost that did conclude it. Shak. Henry VIII.
GRIEVOUS. adj. [gravis, Latin; or from
To grieve.]

1. Afflictive; painful; hard to be born.
To the flesh, as the apostle himself granieth, all affliction is naturally grievous. Hooker.
Correction is grievous unto him that forsaketh
the way, and he that hateth reproof shall die.
Prov. xv. 10.

2. Such as causes sorrow.

To own a great but grievous truth, though they quicken and sharpen the invention, they corrupt the temper. Watts.

3. Expressing a great degree of uneasiness.

He durst not disobey, but sent grievous complaints to the parliament of the usage he was forced to submit to. Clarendon.

4. Atrocious; heavy.

It was a grievous fault,
And grievously hath Caesar answer'd it. Shakefp.

We are grilled all at Temple-bar. Hudibras.

GRIM. adj. [grimma, Saxon.]

1. Having a countenance of terrour; horrible; hideous; frightful.

The innocent prey in haste he does forsake,
Which quit from death, yet quakes in every limb,
With change of fear to see the lion look so grim.
Spenser.

Grim Saturn yet remains,
Bound in those gloomy caves with adamant chains.
Drayton.

Thou hast a grim appearance, and thy face
Bears a command in't. Shakefp. Coriolanus.

Their dear causes
Would to the bleeding and the grim alarm Excite the mortified man. Shakefp. Macbeth.

What if the breath that kindled those grim fires,
Awak'd, should blow them into sevenfold rage?
Milton.

Expert to turn the sway
Of battle, open when and where to close
The ridges of grim war. Milton's Paradise Lost.

He that dares to die,
May laugh at the grim face of law, and scorn
The cruel wrinkle of a tyrant brow. Denham's Sophy.

Their swarthy hosts would darken all our plains,
Doubling the native horror of the war,
And making death more grim. Addison's Cato.

2. Ugly; ill-looking.

Straight stood up to him
Divine Ulysses; who with looks exceeding grave and grim,
This better check gave. Chapman.

grim. Shakefp.

GRIMACE. n. s. [French, from grim.]

1. A distortion of the countenance from habit, affectation, or insolence.

He had not spar'd to shew his piques,
Against th' haranguer's politicks,
With smart remarks of leering faces,
And annotations of grimaces! Hudibras.

The favourable opinion and good word of men comes oftentimes at a very easy rate; and by a few demure looks and affected whims, set off with some odd devotional postures and grimaces, and such other little arts of dissimulation, cunning men will do wonders. South's Sermons.

The buffoon ape, with grimaces and gambols, carried it from the whole field. L'Estrange.

The French nation is addicted to grimace. Spekt.

2. Air of affectation.

nen*, grinden, Dutch, undoubtedly of the same origin with To grind, as we now say to grind the teeth; grincer, French.]

1. To set the teeth together and withdraw the lips either in anger or in mirth.

Death, death! oh, amiable, lovely death!
Come grin on me, and I will think thou smil'st.
Shakefp.

What valour were it, when a cur doth grin,
For one to trust his hand between his teeth,
When he might spurn him with his foot away. Shak.

It was no unpleasant entertainment to me to see the various methods with which they have attacked me; some with piteous moans and outcries, others
grinning and only shewing their teeth. Stillingfleet.

A lion's hide he wears;
About his shoulders hangs the shaggy skin;

The teeth and gaping jaws severely grin. Dryden.
They neither could defend, nor can pursue;
But grinn'd their teeth, and cast a helpless view.

Dryden.

Madness, we fancy, gave an ill-tim'd birth
To grinning laughter, and to frantick mirth. Prior.

Fools grin on fools, and Stoicklike support,
Without one sigh, the pleasures of a court. Young.

2. To fix the teeth as in anguish.

I like not such grinning honour as Sir Walter hath: give me life, which if I can save, so; if not, honour comes unlook'd for, and there's an end.

Shakefp. Henry IV.

GRIN. n. s. [from the verb.] The act of closing the teeth and shewing them.

He laughs at him: in's face too.

—O you mistake him; 'twas an humble grin,
The fawning joy of courtiers and of dogs. Dryden.

The muscles were so drawn together on each side of his face, that he shewed twenty teeth at a grin.
Addison.

Deists are effectually beaten in all their combats at the weapons of men, that is, reason and arguments; and they would now attack our religion with the talents of a vile animal, that is, grin and grimace. Watts on the Mind.

What lords are those saluting with a grin?

One is just out, and one is lately in. Young.

GRIN. n. s. [gryn, gynene, Saxon.] A snare; a trap.

robber shall prevail against him. Job, xviii. 9.

To GRIND. v. u. preter. I ground; part.
pass. ground. [grundan, gegunden, ground, Saxon.]

1. To reduce any thing to powder by friction; to comminute by attrition.

And whosoever shall fall on this stone, shall be broken; but on whomsoever it shall fall, it will grind him to powder. Matt.

He that will have a cake out of the wheat, must needs tarry the grinding. Shak. Troilus and Cressida.

What relation or affinity is there between a minute body and cogitation, any more than the greatest?
Is a small drop of rain any wiser than the ocean?

Or do we grind inanimate corn into living and rational meal? Bentley's Sermons.

2. To sharpen or smooth by rubbing on something hard.

Meeting with time, slack thing, said I,
Thy fithe is dull; whet it, for shame:

No marvel, Sir, he did reply,
If it at length deserve some blame;

But where one man would have me grind it,
Twenty to one too sharp do find it. Hebert.

Against

G R I

Against a stump his tusk the monster grinds.
And in the sharpen'd edge new vigour finds. Dryd.

3. To rub one against another.
So up he let him rise: who with grim look,
And count'nance stern, upstanding, 'gan to grind
His grated teeth for great Idain. Spenser.

Harsh sounds, as of a saw when it is sharpened, and grinding of one stone against another, make a shivering or horror in the body, and set the teeth on edge. Bacon's Natural History.

That the stomach in animals grinds the substances which it receives, is evident from the dissection of animals, which have swallowed metals, which have been found polished on the side next the stomach. Arbutnot on Aliments.

4. To harass; to oppress.

Some merchants and tradesmen, under colour of furnishing the colony with necessities, may not grind them so as shall always keep them in poverty. Bacon's Advice to Villiers.

5. In the following lines. I know not whether it be not corruptly used for grinding, cutting.

Not knowing 'twas my labour, I complain
Of sudden shootings, and of grinding pains,
My throws came thicker, and my cries increas'd. Dryden.

To GRIND. v. n.

1. To perform the act of grinding; to move a mill.

Fetter'd they send thee
Into the common prison, there to grind
Among the slaves and asses. Milton's Agonistes.

2. To be moved as in the act of grinding.

Shrinking sinews start,
And smeary foam works o'er my grinding jaws. Rowe.

GRINDER. n. f. [from grind.]

1. One that grinds; one that works in a mill.

2. The instrument of grinding.

His heart a solid rock, to fear unknown,
And harder than the grinder's nether stone. Sandys.

Now exhort
Thy hands to exercise the pointed steel
On the hard rock, and give a wheely form
To the expected grinder. Philips.

3. [grind to-day.] The back teeth; the double teeth.

The teeth are in men of three kinds: sharp, as the foreteeth; broad, as the back-teeth, which we call the molar-teeth, or grinders; and pointed teeth, or canine, which are between both. Bacon.

He the raging lion's confounds,
The roaring lion with his javelin wounds;
Scatters their whelps, their grinders breaks; so they
With the old hunter starve for want of prey. Sandys.

The jaw-teeth, or grinders, in Latin molares, are made flat and broad at-top, and withal somewhat uneven and rugged, that, by their knobs and little cavities, they may the better retain, grind, and comminute the aliments. Ray on the Creation.

Nature is at a great deal of labour to transmute vegetable into animal substances; therefore herb-eating animals, which do not ruminate, have strong grinders and chew much. Arbutnot.

4. The teeth, in irony or contempt.

One, who at the sight of supper open'd wide
His jaws before, and whetted grinders try'd. Dryd.

Both be brought,
He mouth'd them, and betwixt his grinders caught. Dryden.

GRINDLESTONE. } n. f. [from grind and GRINDSTONE. } stone.] The stone on which edged instruments are sharpened.

Such a light and metall'd dance
Saw you never yet in France;
And by the lead-men, for the nonce,
That turn asquid like grindstones, Ben Jonson.

Literature is the grindstone to sharpen the coulters, and to whet their natural faculties. Hammond.

G R I

Smiths that make hinges brighten them, yet seldom file them; but grind them on a grindstone 'till bright. Moxon.

GRINNER. n. f. [from grin.] He that grins.
The frightfulst grinner
Be the winner. Addison's Spectator.

GRINNINGLY. adv. [from grin.] With a grinning laugh.

Unlucky Wested! thy unfeeling master,
The more thou ticklest, gripes his hand the faster. Pope.

5. To pitch; to press; to squeeze.

A wondrous way it for this lady wrought,
From lion's claws to pluck the griped prey. Spenser.
And first the dame came rushing thro' the wood;
And next the famish'd hounds that sought their food,
And grip'd her flanks, and oft essay'd their jaws in blood. Dryden's Fables.

6. To give a pain in the bowels.

Thus full of counsel to the den she went,
Grip'd all the way, and longing for a vent. Dryden.

To GRIPE. v. n.

1. To feel the colick, to have the belly-ach.

Many people would, with reason, prefer the griping of an hungry belly to those dishes which are a feast to others. Locke.

Manna, by the bulk, figure, texture, and motion of its parts, has a power to produce the sensations of sickness, and sometimes of acute pains or gripings in us. Locke.

2. To pinch; to catch at money meanly.

His mean revenue, by being scattered, in the worst of times growing upon him, when others that had great ones, by gripping, made them less, and grew stark beggars. Fell.

GRIPE. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Grasp; hold; seizure of the hand or paw.

Therefore still on high
He over him did hold his cruel claws, Threat'ning with greedy gripe to do him dy, Spenser.
They put a barren sceptre in my gripe
Thence to be wrench'd with an upstart hand. Shak.

Should I
Slaver with lips, as common as the stairs
That mount the Capitol; join gripes with hands
Made hard with hourly falsehood as with labour. Shakespeare.

He gave me his hand,
And, with a feeble gripe, says, dear, my lord,
Command my service. Shakesp. Henry V.
I fell; and with my weight the helm constrain'd,
Was drawn along, which yet my gripe retain'd. Dryden's Æn.

2. Squeeze; pressure.

Pir'd with this thought, 'at once he strain'd the heart;
'Tis true, the hardest breast resists the gripe,
And the cold lips return a knotty gripe. Dryden.

3. Oppression; crushing power.

I take my cause
Out of the gripe of cruel men, and give it
To a most noble Judge, the Ritz my master. Shak.

4. Affliction; pinching distress.

Adam, at the news

G R I

Heart-struck with chilling gripe of sorrow flood,
That all his senses bound! Milton's Paradise Lost.

Can'st thou bear cold and hunger? Can these limbs,
Fram'd for the tender offices of love,
Endure the bitter gripes of smarting poverty? Orway.

5. [In the plural.] Belly-ach: colick.

In the jaundice the choler is wanting; and the icterical have a great sourness and gripes, with windiness. Floyer.

GRI'PER. n. f. [from gripe.] Oppressor;
usurer; extortioner.

Others pretend zeal, and yet are professed usurers, grippers, monsters of men, and harpies. Burton.

GRI'PINGLY. adv. [from gripping.] With pain in the guts.

Clysters help, lest the medicine stop in the guts, and work gripingly. Bacon's Natural History.

GRI'PLE. n. f. A greedy snatcher; a griping miser. Spenser.

GRISA'MBER. n. f. Used by Milton for ambergrise.

The vertebrae of a hog broiled.

GRI'SLY. adj. [grylu, Saxon.] Dreadful; horrible; hideous; frightful; terrible.

His grisly locks, long grown and unbound,
Disordered hung about his shoulders round. Spenser.

Where I was wont to seek the honey bee,
The grisly toadstool grown there might I see. Spens.

My grisly countenance made others fly;
None durst come near, for fear of sudden death. Shakesp. H. VI.

Back step'd those two fair angels, half amaz'd
So sudden to behold the grisly king;

Yet thus, unmov'd with fear, accost him soon. Milt.

For that damn'd magician, let him be girt
With all the grisly legions that troop
Under the footy flag of Acheron. Milton.

The bauteous form of fight,
Is chang'd, and war appears a grisly fight. Dryden.

In vision thou shalt see his grisly face,
The king of terrors raging in thy race. Dryd. Inno.

Thus the grisly spectre spoke again. Dryden.

Close by each other laid, they press'd the ground,
Their manly bosoms pierc'd with many a grisly wound. Dryd.

So rushes on his foe the grisly bear. Addison.

GRIST. n. f. [gryt, Saxon.]

1. Corn to be ground.

Get grist to the mill to have plenty in store,
Lest miller lack water. Tusser's Husbandry.

A mighty trade this lusty miller drove;
Much grist from Cambridge to his lot did fall,
And all the corn they w'd a scholar's hall. Miller of Tromp.

2. Supply; provision.

Matter as wise logicians say,
Cannot without a form subsist;
And form, say I, as well as they,
Must fail, if matter brings no grist. Swift.

3. GRIST to Mill, is profit; gain.

The computation of degrees, in all matrimonial causes, is wont to be made according to the rules of that law, because it brings grist to the mill. Ayliffe.

GRISTLE. n. f. [gryzle.] Saxon.] A cartilage; a part of the body next in hardness to a bone.

No living creatures that have shells very hard,
as oysters, crabs, lobsters, and especially the tortoise, have bones within them, but only little gristles. Bacon's Natural History.

Lest the asperity or hardness of cartilages should hurt the oesophagus or gullet; which is tender and of a skinny substance, or hinder the swallowing of our meat, therefore the annular gristles of the windpipe, are not made round, or entire circles; but where

where the gullet touches the windpipe, there, to fill up the circle is only a soft membrane, which may easily give way to the dilatation of the gullet. Ray.

GRISTLY. adj. [from gristle.] Cartilaginous; made of gristle.

At last they spit out pieces of their lungs; it may be small gristly bits, that are eaten off from the lung-pipes. Harvey.

She has made the back-bone of several vertebrae, as being more fit to bend, more tough, and less in danger of breaking, than if they were all one entire bone without these gristly junctures. Morr.

Fins are made of gristly spokes, or rays connected by membranes; so that they may be contracted or extended like women's fans. Ray.

They have a louder and stronger note than other birds of the same bigness, which have only a gristly windpipe. Grew.

Each pipe distinguish'd by its gristly rings,
To cherish life aerial pasture brings. Blackmore.

GRIT. n. f. [grýzza, graoz, Saxon.]

1. The coarse part of meal.

2. Oats husked. or coarsely ground.

3. Sand; rough hard particles.

Silexian bole, crackling a little betwixt the teeth, yet without the least particle of grit, feels as smooth as soap. Grew.

The sturdy pear-tree here
Will rise luxuriant, and with toughest root Pierce the obstructing grit and retentive marle. Philips.

4. Grits are fossils found in minute masses, forming together a kind of powder; the several particles of which are of no determinate shape, but seem the rudely broken fragments of larger masses; not to be dissolved or disunited by water, but retaining their figure, and not cohering into a mass. One sort is a fine, dull looking, grey grit, which, if wetted with salt water, into mortar or paste, dries almost immediately, and coalesces into a hard stony mass, such as is not easily afterwards disunited by water. This is the pulvis peteculanus of the ancients, mixed among their cements used in buildings sunk into the sea; and in France and Italy an ingredient in their harder plaisters, under the name of pozzolane. It is common on the sides of hills in Italy. Another species, which is a coarse, beautifully green, dull grit, is the chrysocollo of the ancients, which they used in soldering gold, long supposed a lost fossil. It serves the purpose of soldering metals better than borax. The ferrugineous black glittering grit, is the black shining sand employed to throw over writing, found on the shores of Italy. Hill on Fossils.

GRITTINESS. n. f. [from gritty.] Sandiness; the quality of abounding in grit.

In fuller's-earth he could find no sand by the microscope, nor any grittiness. Mortimer's Husbandry.

GRITTY. adj. [from grit.] Full of hard particles; consisting of grit.

I could not discern the unevenness of the surface of the powder, nor the little shadows let fall from the gritty particles thereof. Newton.

GRIZELIN. adj. [more properly gridelin.] See GRIDELIN.

The Burgundy, which is grizelin or pale red, of all others, is surest to ripen in our climate. Temple.

GRIZZLE. n. f. [from gris, gray; grisaille, French.] A mixture of white and black; gray.

O thou dissembling cub! what wilt thou be,
When time hath sow'd a grizzle on thy face. Shak.

GRIZZLED. adj. [from grizzle.] Interspersed with gray.

To the boy Cæsar, send this grizzled head. Shak.

His beard was grizzled: no,

—It was as I have seen it in his life. Shakesp. Ham.

His hair just grizzled,

As in green old age. Dryden and Lee's Oedipus.

Those grizzled locks, which nature did provide

In plenteous growth their asses ears to hide. Dryd.

GRIZZLY. adj. [from gris, gray, French.] Somewhat gray.

Living creatures generally do change their hair with age, turned to be gray and white; as is seen in men, though some earlier, some later; in horses that are dappled and turn white; and in old squirrels that turn grizzly. Bacon.

GROAN. v. n. [gnanan, Saxon; gromen, Dutch.] To breathe with a hoarse noise, as in pain or agony.

Many an heir

Of these fair edifices, for my wars,

Have I heard groan and drop. Shakesp. Coriolanus.

Men groan from out of the city, and the soul of the wounded crieth out. Job. xiv. 12.

Repenting and groaning for anguish of spirit.

Wisd. v. 3.

So shall the world go on,

To good malignant, to bad men benign,

Under her own weight groaning. Milt. Par. Lost

Nothing can so peculiarly gratify the noble dispositions of humanity, as for one man to see another so much himself as to sigh his griefs and groan his pains. South.

On the blazing pile his parent lay,

Or a lov'd brother groan'd his life away. Pope's Od

GROAN. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Breath expired with noise and difficulty, from pain, faintness or weariness.

Alas poor country,

Where sighs and groans, and shrieks that rend the air,

Are made, not mark'd? Shakesp. Macbeth.

I led to slaughter, and to slaughter leave;

And ev'n from hence their dying groans receive. Dryden.

Hence aching bosoms wear a visage gay,

And stifled groans frequent the ball and play. Young.

2. Any hoarse dead sound.

Such sheets of fire, such bursts of horrid thunder,

Such groans of roaring wind and rain, I never Remember to have heard. Shakespeare's King Lear.

GROANFUL. adj. [groan and full.] Sad; agonizing. Not used.

Adown he keft it with so puissant wrest,

That back again it did aloft rebound,

And gave against his mother earth a groanful sound. Spenser.

GROAT. n. f. [groot, Dutch; grosso, Italian.]

1. A piece valued at four-pence.

2. A proverbial name for a small sum.

My mother was wont

To call them woollen vassals, things created

To buy and sell with groats. Shakesp. Coriolanus.

I dare lay a groat,

A tertian ague is at least your lot. Dryden's Fables.

Imagine a person of quality to marry a woman much his inferior, and without a groat to her fortune. Swift.

3. GROATS. Oats that have the hulls taken off. Ainsworth.

GROCER. n. f. [This should be written groffer, from gross, a large quantity; a grocer originally being one who dealt by wholesale; or from grossus, a fig, which their present state seems to favour.]

A grocer is a man who buys and sells tea, sugar, and plumbs and spices for gain. Watts's Logic.

But still the offspring of your brain shall prove

The grocer's care, and brave the rage of Jove. Garth.

GROCERY. n. f. [from grocer.] Grocers ware, such as tea; sugar; raisins; spice.

His troops being now in a country where they were not expected, met with many cart loads of wine, grocery, and tobacco. Clarendon.

GROGERAM. } n. f. [gris, grain, French; grossogranus, low Latin. Ainsworth.] Stuff woven with large woof and a rough pile.

Certes they're neatly cloth'd; I of this mind am,
Your only wearing is your grogeram. Donne.

Natolia affords great store of chamelots and grogram. Sandys.

Some men will say this habit of John's was neither of chamel's skin nor any coarse texture of its hair, but rather some finer weave of cantelot, rogram, or the like. Brown.

The natural sweetness and innocence of her behaviour shot me through and through, and did more execution upon me in rogram than the greatest beauty in town had ever done in brocade. Addison.

Plain goody would no longer down;
'Twas madam in her rogram gown. Swift.

GROIN. n. f. [Of uncertain derivation.] The part next the thigh.

Antiplexus, a sonne of Priam, threw

His lance at Ajax through the preasse, which went by him, and flew

On Leucus, wife Ulysses' friend: His groin is smote. Chapman.

The fatal dart arrives,

And through the border of his buckler drives;
Pass'd through and pierc'd his groin; the deadly wound

Cast from his chariot, roll'd him on the ground. Dryd.

All Rhodes is summon'd to the nuptial feast. Dryd.

GROOVE. n. f. [from grave.]

1. A deep cavern, or hollow in mines.

He might, to avoid idleness work in a groove or mine-pit thereabouts, which at that time was little esteemed. Boyle.

2. A channel or hollow cut with a tool.

The screw-plate is a kind of steel well tempered, with several holes in it, each less than other; and in those holes are threads grooved inwards, which grooves fit the respective taps that belong to them. Moxon's Mech. Exer.

To GROOVE. v. a. [from the noun.] To cut hollow.

Of the box every joint was well grooved. Swift.

To GROPE. v. n. [gnapan, Saxon.] To feel where one cannot see.

My sea-gown scarf about me, in the dark Grop'd I to find out them. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

We gripe for the wall like the blind, and we gripe, as if we had no eyes. Isa. lix. 10.

They meet with darkness in the clearest light;
And gripe at noon, as if involv'd with night. Sandys.

A boy was groping for eels, and laid his hand on upon a snake. L'Estrange.

This, no doubt, is better for men than that they should in the dark gripe after knowledge; as St.
Paul tells us all nations did after God. Locke.

He

He heard us in our course,
And with his outstretch'd arms around him grop'd.
Addison.

O truth divine! enlighten'd by thy ray,
I grop and guess no more, but see my way.
Arbutnot.

TO GROPE. v. a. To search by feeling in the dark; to feel without being able to see.

How vigilant to grobe mens thoughts, and to pick out somewhat whereof they might complain.
Hayward.

They have left our endeavours to grobe them out
By twilight, and by darkness almost to discover that, whose existence is evidenced by light. Brown.

But Strephon, cautious, never meant
The bottom of the pan to grobe. Swift.

Shew scarce so gross as beetles. Shak. King Lear.

There are two gross volumes concerning the power of popes. Bacon.

2. Shameful; unseemly; enormous.

He ripely considered how gross a thing it were for men of his quality, wife and grave men, to live with such a multitude, and to be tenants at will under them. Hooker.

They can say that in doctrine, in discipline, in prayer, and in sacraments, the church of Rome hath very foul and gross corruptions. Hooker.

So far hath the natural understanding, even of sundry whole nations, been darkened, that they have not discerned, no, nor gross iniquity to be sin.
Hooker.

There is a vain and imprudent use of their estates, which, though it does not destroy like gross sins, yet disorders the heart, and supports it in sensuality and dulness. Law.

3. Intellectually coarse; palpable; impure;
unrefined.

To all sense 'tis gross
You love my son: invention is aham'd,
Against the proclamation of thy passion,
To say thou do'st not. Shakefp.

Examples gross as earth exhort me. Shakefp.
Belial came last, than whom a spirit more lewd
Fell not from heaven, or more gross to love
Vice for itself. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Is not religion so perfectly good in itself, above all,
in its author, that, without the gross sensuality,
we cannot but admire it? Spratt.

It is a gross mistake of some men, to think that our want only and imperfections do naturally induce us to be beneficent. Smalridge.

But she dares never boast the present hour,
So gross the cheat, it is beyond her pow'r. Young.

4. Inelegant; disproportionate in bulk.

The sun's oppressive ray, the roseate bloom
Of beauty blushing, gives the gloomy hue,
And feature gross. Thomson's Summer.

5. Dense; not refined; not attenuated;
not pure.

It is manifest, that when the eye standeth in the finer medium, and the object is in the gross, things shew greater, but contrariwise, when the eye is placed in the gross medium, and the object in the finer. Bacon's Natural History.

Of elements,
The gross feeds the purer; earth the sea,
Earth and the sea feed air. Milton's Par. Lost.

Light fumes are merry, gross fumes are sad;
Both are the reasonable soul run mad. Dryd. Fables.

Or suck the mists in gross air below,
Or dip their pinions in the painted bow. Pope.

6. Stupid; dull.

If she doth then the subtle sense excel,
How gross are they that drown her in her blood?
Davies.

And in clear dream and solemn vision,
Tell her of things that no gross ear can hear. Milton.
Some me give more light and knowledge by the bare stating of the question with perspicuity and justness, than others by talking of it in gross confusion for whole hours together. Watts.

7. Coarse; rough; opposite to delicate.

Fine and delicate sculptures are helped with nearness, and gross with distance. Watson's Architect.

8. Thick; fat; bulky.

His stature was of just height and all proportionate dimensions, avoiding the extremes of gross and meagre. Fell.

GROSS. n. s. [from the adjective.]

1. The main body; the main force.

The Belgians hop'd, that with disorder'd haste
The deep-cut keels upon the sand might run;
Or, if with caution leisurely we pass,
Their numerous gross might charge us one by one. Dryden.

Several casuists are of opinion, that, in a battle,
you should discharge upon the gross of the enemy, without levelling your piece at any particular person. Addison's Freeholder.

The gross of the people can have no other prospect in changes and revolutions than of publick blessings. Addison.

2. The bulk; the whole not divided into its several parts.

Certain general inducements are used to make salable your cause in gross. Hooker.

There was an opinion in gross, that the soul was immortal. Abbot.

There is confession, that is, the acknowledging our sins to God; and this may be either general or particular: The general is, when we only confess in gross that we are sinful; the particular, when we mention the several sorts and acts of our sins.

Duty of Man.

Remember, son,

You are a general: other wars require you;
For see the Saxon gross begins to move. Dryden.

Notwithstanding the decay and loss of sundry trades and manufactures, yet in the gross, we ship off now one third part more of the manufactures, as also lead and tin, than we did twenty years past.

Child on Trade.

3. Not individual; but a body together.

He hath ribbons of all the colours i' th' rainbow;
they come to him by the gross. Shakefp.

I cannot instantly raise up the gross
Of full three thousand duets. Shakefp.

You see the united design of many persons to make up one figure: after they have separated themselves in many petty divisions, they rejoin one by one into a gross. Dryden.

4. The chief part; the main mass.

Comets, out of question, have likewise power and effect over the gross and mass of things. Bacon.

The articulate sounds are more confused, though the gross of the sound be greater. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

5. The number of twelve dozen. [Grosse,
French.]

It is made up only of that simple idea of an unite repeated; and repetitions of this kind, joined together, make those distinct simple modes of a dozen, a gross, and a million. Locke.

GROSSLY. adv. [from gross.]

1. Bulkily; in bulky parts; coarsely: as, this matter is grossly pulverized.

2. Without subtilty; without art; without delicacy; without refinement; coarsely;
palpably.

Such kind of ceremonies as have been so grossly and shamefully abused in the church of Rome, where they remain, are scandalous. Hooker.

Treason and murder ever kept together,
As two yoke devils sworn to other's purpose,
Working so grossly in a natural cause,
That admiration did not whoop at them. Shakefp.

And thine eye,
See it so grossly shown in thy behaviour,
That in their kind they speak it. Shakefp.

What! are we cuckolds ere we have deserv'd it?
—Speak not so grossly. Shak. Merchant of Venice.

What I have said has been forced from me, by seeing a noble sort of poetry so happily restored by one man, and so grossly copied by almost all the rest. Dryden.

If I speak of light and rays as endued with colours, I would be understood to speak not philosophically and properly, but grossly, and according to such conceptions as vulgar people would be apt to frame. Newton's Opticks.

While it is so difficult to learn the springs and motives of some facts, it is no wonder they should be so grossly misrepresented to the publick by cu-

GROSSNESS. n. s. [from gross.]

1. Coarseness; not subtilty; thickness;
spissitude; density; greatness of parts.

The purpose is perspicuous even as substance,
Whose grossness little characters sum up. Shakefp.

And I will purge that mortal grossness so,
That thou shalt like an airy spirit go. Shakefp.

The cause of the epilepsy from the stomach is the grossness of the vapours which rise and enter into the cells of the brain. Bacon.

Then all this earthy grossness quit;
Attir'd with stars we shall for ever sit,
Triumphing over death. Milton.

This being the first colour which vapours begin to reflect, it ought to be the colour of the finest and most transparent skies, in which the vapours are not arrived to that grossness requisite to reflect other colours. Newton's Opticks.

For envy'd wit, like Sol eclips'd, makes known
Th' opposing body's grossness, not its own. Pope.

2. Inelegant fatness; unwieldy corpulence.

Wise men, that be over-fat and fleshy, go to sojourn abroad at the temperate diet of some sober man; and so, by little and little, eat away the grossness that is in them. Ascham.

3. Want of refinement; want of delicacy; intellectual coarseness.

I was three or four times in the thought they were not fairies; and yet the guiltiness of my mind drove the grossness of the foppery into a received belief that they were fairies. Shakefp.

Whatever beauties it may want, 'tis free at least from the grossness of those faults I mentioned. Dryd.

What a grossness is there in the mind of that man, who thinks to reach a lady's heart by wounding her ears! Clarissa.

GROT. n. s. [grotte, French; grotta, Italian.]

A cave; a cavern for coolness and pleasure.

In the remotest wood and lonely grot,
Certain to me t that wort of evils, thought. Prior.

Awful to see the Egerian grot. Pope.

GROTESQUE. adj. [grotesque, French; grotesco, Italian.] Distorted of figure; unnatural; wildly formed.

The champaign head
Of a steep wilderness, whose hairy sides
With thicket overgrown, grotesque and wild, Access deny'd. Milton's Paradise Lost.

There is yet a lower sort of poetry and painting, which is out of nature; for a farce is that in poetry which grotesque is in a picture: the persons and actions of a farce are all unnatural, and the manners false, that is, inconsistent with the characters of mankind: grotesque painting is the just resemblance of this. Dryden.

An hideous figure of their faces they drew,
Nor lines, nor looks, nor shades, nor colours true,
And this grotesque design expos'd to publick view. Dryden.

Palladian walls, Venetian doors,
Grotesco roofs, and stucco floors. Pope.

GRO'TTO. n. s. [grotte, French; grotta, Italian.] A cavern or cave made for coolness. It is not used properly of a dark horrid cavern.

Their careless chiefs to the cool grottoes run,
The bow'rs of kings, to shade them from the sun. Dryden.

This was found at the entry of the grotto in the Peak. Woodward.

GROVE. n. s. [from grave.] A walk covered by trees meeting above.

I look'd toward Birnam, and anon methought
The wood began to move: Within

Within this three mile you may see it coming;
I say, a moving grove. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
Fortunate fields, and groves, and flow'ry vales;
Thrice happy isles! Milton.
She left the flow'ry field, and waving grove.
Blackmore.

Banish'd from courts and love,
Abandon'd truth seeks shelter in the grove. Granville.
Can fierce passions vex his breast,
While every gale is peace, and every grove
Is melody? Thompson's Spring.

To GRO'VEL. v. n. [grufde, Islandick, flat on the face. It may perhaps come by gradual corruption from ground fell.]

1. To lie prone; to creep low on the ground.

The steel-head passage wrought,
And through his shoulder pierc'd; wherewith to ground
He groveling fell, all gored in his gushing wound.
Spenser.

What see'st thou there? king Henry's diadem,
Inch'd with all the honours of the world!
If so, gaze on, and grovel on thy face,
Until thy head be circled with the same. Shakefp.
Oke mast and beech, and cornell fruit they eate,
Groveling like swine on earth, in fowlest sort,
Chapman.

Now they lie
Groveling and prostrate on yon lake of fire. Milton.
Upon thy belly groveling thou shalt go. Milton.

Let us then conclude that all painters ought to require this part of excellence: not to do it, is to want courage, and not dare to shew themselves: 'tis to creep and grovel on the ground. Dryden.

2. To be mean; to be without dignity or elevation.

I must disclaim whate'er he can express;
His groveling sense will shew my passion less. Dryden.
Several thoughts may be natural which are low and groveling. Adairson's Spectator.

GROUND. n. f. [grunb, Saxon; grondt, Danish.]

1. The earth; considered as superficially extended, and therefore related to tillage, travel, habitation, or almost any action.
The main mass of terrene matter is never called the ground. We never distinguish the terraqueous globe into ground and water, but into earth, or land, and water;
again, we never say under earth but under ground.

Israel shall go on dry ground through the sea.
Ex. xiv. 16.

Man to till the ground
None was, and from the earth a dewy mist
Went up, and water'd all the ground. Milton.

From the other hill
To their fix'd station, all in bright array,
The cherubim descended, on the ground
Gliding meteorous. Milton.

A black bituminous gurge
Boils up from under ground. Milton.
And yet so nimbly he would bound,
As if he scorn'd to touch the ground. Hudibras.

2. The earth as distinguished from air or water.

I have made man and beast upon the ground.
Jeremiab.

There was a dew upon all the ground. Judg. vi. 40.
They fann'd their wings, and soaring th' air sublime,

With clang despis'd the ground. Milton.

Too late young Turnus the delusion found;
Far on the sea, still making from the ground. Dryd.

3. Land; country.

The water breaks its bounds,
And overflows the level grounds. Hudibras.

4. Region; territory.

On heavenly ground they stood, and from the shore
They view'd the vast immeasurable abyss. Milton.
With these came they, who from the bord'ring flood
Of old Euphrates to the brook that parts
Egypt from Syrian ground, had general names Of Baalim and Ashtarothe. Milton's Paradise Lost.

5. Estate; possession.

Uneasy still within these narrow bounds,
Thy next design is on thy neighbours grounds;
His crop invites, to full perfection grown;
Thy own seems thin, because it is thy own. Dryd.

6. Land occupied.

The sea o'erflow'd my ground,
And my best Flanders mare was drown'd. Milton.

7. The floor or level of the place.

Wherefore should I smite thee to the ground?
2 Sam. ii. 22.

Dagon was fallen on his face to the ground.
1 Sam. v. 4.

A multitude sit on the ground. Matt. xv. 35.
Some part of the month of June, the water of this lake descends under ground, through many great holes at the bottom. Brown.

8. Dregs; lees; faces; that which settles at the bottom of liquors.

Set by them cyder, verjuice, sour drink, or grounds.
Mortimer.

Some insist upon having had particular success in stopping gangrenes, from the use of the grounds of strong beer, mixed up with bread or oatmeal.
Sharp's Surgery.

9. The first stratum of paint upon which the figures are afterwards painted.

We see the limner to begin with a rude draught, and the painter to lay his grounds with darksome colours. Hakewill.

When solid bodies, sensible to the feeling and dark, are placed on light and transparent grounds, as, for example, the heavens, the clouds and waters and every other thing which is in motion, and void of different objects; they ought to be more rough, and more distinguishable, than that with which they are encompassed. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

10. The fundamental substance; that by which the additional or accidental parts are supported.

O'er his head
A well-wrought heaven of silk and gold was spread,
Azure the ground, the sun in gold shone bright.
Cowley.

Indeed it was but just that the finest lines in nature should be drawn upon the most durable ground.
Pope.

Then, wrought into the soul, let virtues shine,
The ground eternal, as the work divine. Young.

11. The plain song; the tune on which descants are raised.

Get a prayer-book in your hand,
And stand between two churchmen, good my lord;
For on that ground I'll build a holy descant. Shak.

12. First hint; first traces of an invention;
that which gives occasion to the rest.

Though jealousy of state th' invention found,
Yet love refin'd upon a former ground;
That way the tyrant had reserv'd to fly,
Pursuing hate, now serv'd to bring two lovers nigh.
Dryden.

13. The first principles of knowledge.

The concords will easily be known, if the fore-grounds be thoroughly beaten in. Prof. to Accidence.
Here statesmen, or of them they which can read,
May of their occupation find the grounds. Donne.

The grounds are already laid whereby that is unquestionably resolved; for having granted that God gives sufficient grace, yet when he co-operates most effectually, he doth it not irresistibly. Hammond.

After evening repasts, 'till bed-time, their thoughts will be best taken up in the easy grounds of religion, and the story of scripture. Milton.

14. The fundamental cause; the true reason; original principle.

He desired the steward to tell him particularly the ground and event of this accident. Sidney.

Making happiness the ground of his unhappiness, and good news the argument of his sorrow. Sidney.

The use and benefit of good laws all that live under them may enjoy with delight and comfort albeit the grounds and first original causes from whence they have sprung be unknown. Hooker.

In the solution of the Sabbatizer's objection, my method shall be, to examine, in the first place, the main grounds and principles upon which he buildeth.

White.

Thou could'st not have discern'd
Fraud in the serpent, speaking as he spake,
No ground of enmity between us known. Milton.

Nor did either of them ever think fit to make any particular relation of the grounds of their proceedings, or the causes of their misadventures. Clarendon.
Sound judgement is the ground of writing well.
Roscommon.

Love once given from her, and plac'd in you,
Would leave no ground I ever would be true. Dryd.

It is not easy to imagine how any such tradition could arise so early, and spread so universally, if there were not a real ground for it. Wilkins.

If it be natural, ought we not to conclude that there is some ground and reason for these fears, and that nature hath not planted them in use to no purpose. Tillofson.

Thus it appears, that suits in law are not sinful in themselves, but may lawfully be used, if there is no unlawfulness in the ground and way of management. Kettlewell.

Upon that prince's death, although the grounds of our quarrel with France had received no manner of addition, yet this lord thought fit to alter his sentiments. Swift.

The miraculous increase of the professors of Christianity, was without any visible grounds and causes, and contrary to all human probability and appearance. Atterbury.

15. The field or place of action.

Here was thy end decreed, when these men rose;
And ev'n with theirs this act thy death did bring,
Or hasten'd at the least upon this ground. Daniel.

16. The space occupied by an army as they fight; advance; or retire.

At length the left wing of the Arcadians began to lose ground. Sidney.

Heartless they fought, and quit ed soon their ground,
Whilst our's with easy victory were crown'd. Dryd.

He has lost ground at the latter end of the day, by pursuing his point too far, like the prince of Conde at the battle of Seneffe. Dryd. Fables, Pref.

17. The intervening space between the flyer and pursuer.

Ev'ning mist,
Ris'n from a river, o'er the marsh glides,
And gathers ground fast at the labourer's heels, Homeward returning. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Superiors think it a detraction from their merit to see another get ground upon them, and overtake them in the pursuits of glory. Adairson's Spectator.

Even whilst we speak our conqueror comes on,
And gathers ground upon us every moment. Adairson.

18. The state in which one is with respect to opponents or competitors.

Had'st thou sway'd as kings should do,
Giving no ground unto the house of York,
They never then had sprung. Shakefp. Henry VI.

If they get ground and 'vantage of the king,
Then join you with them like a rib of steel,
To make them stronger. Shakespeare's Henry IV.

He will stand his ground against all the attacks that can be made upon his probity. Atterbury.

Whatever ground we may have gotten upon our enemies, we have gotten none upon our vices, the worst enemies of the two; but are even subdued and led captive by the one, while we triumph so gloriously over the others. Atterbury.

19. State of progress or recession.

I have known so many great examples of this cure, and heard of its being so familiar in Austria, that I wonder it has gained no more ground in other places. Temple.

The squirrel is so perpetually turning the wheel in her cage: she runs apace, and wears herself with her continual motion: and gets no ground. Dryden.

20. The foil to set a thing off.

Like bright metal on a sullen ground,
My reformation glittering o'er my fault,
Shall shew more goodly, and attract more eyes,
Than that which hath no foil to set it off.
Shakespeare.

To GROUND. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To fix on the ground.

2 To

2. To found, as upon cause, reason, or principle.

Wisdom groundeth her laws upon an infallible rule of comparison. Hooker.

The church of England, walking in the good and old way of the orthodoxal primitive fathers, groundeth the religious observation of the Lord's-day, and of other Christian holidays, upon the natural equity, and not upon the letter of the fourth commandment. White.

It may serve us to ground conjectures more approaching to the truth than we have hitherto met with. Boyle.

If your own actions on your will you ground, Mine shall hereafter know no other bound. Dryden.

Some eminent spirit, having signalized his valour, becomes to have influence on the people, to grow their leader in warlike expeditions; and this is grounded upon the principles of nature and common reason, which, where prudence and courage are required, rather incite us to fly to a single person than a multitude. Swift.

3. To settle in first principles or rudiment of knowledge.

Being rooted and grounded in love. Eph. iii. 17.

GROUND. The preterite and part. pass. of grind.

How dull and rugged, ere 'tis ground And polish'd, looks a diamond. Hudibras.

GROUND is much used in composition for that which is next the ground, or near the ground.

GRO'UND-ASH. n. f. A saplin of ash taken from the ground; not a branch cut from a tree.

A lance of tough ground-ash the Trojan threw, Rough in the rind, and knotted as it grew. Dryden's Æn.

Some cut the young ashes off about an inch above the ground, which causes them to make very large straight shoots, which they call ground-ash. Mortimer's Husbandry.

GRO'UNDBAIT. n. f. [from ground and bait.] A bait made of barley or malt boiled; which, being thrown into the place where you design to angle, sinks to the bottom, and draws the fish to it.

Take the depth of the place where you mean after to cast your ground-bait, and to fish. Walton's Angler.

GROUND FLOOR. n. f. [from ground and floor.] The lower story of a house.

GRO'UND-IVY. n. f. [hedera terrestris, Latin.] Alehoof, or tunhoof.

Alehoof or ground-ivy is, in my opinion, of the most excellent use and virtue of any plants among us. Temple.

GRO'UND-OAK. n. f. [from ground and oak.]

If the planting of oaks were more in use for underwoods, it would spoil the cooper's trade for the making of hoops; either of hael or ash; because one hoop made of the young shoots of a ground-oak, would outlast six of the best ash. Mort.

GRO'UND-PINE. n. f. [chamaepitys, Latin.] A plant.

The whole plant has a very singular smell, resembling that of resin; whence its name ground-pine. It grows on dry and barren hills, and in some places on the ditch banks by road sides. Hill.

GRO'UND-PLATE. n. f. [In architecture.]

The outermost pieces of timber lying on or near the ground, and framed into one another with mortises and tennons. In these also are mortises made to receive the tennons of the joists, the summer and girders; and sometimes the trimmers for the stair-case and chimney-way, and the binding joist. Harris.

In the orthographical schemes there should be a true delineation, if it be a timber-building, of the several sizes of the ground plates, breast summers, and beams. Mortimer.

GRO'UND-PLOT. n. f.

1. The ground on which any building is placed.

Wretched Gynecia, where can'st thou find any small ground-plot for hope to dwell upon? Sidney.

The poor at the enclosure doth grutch,
Because of abuser that fall,
Left some men should have but too much,
And some again nothing at all. Tusser's Husb.

But what we're born for we must bear,
Our frail condition it is such,
That what to all may happen here,
If chance to me, I must not grutch. Ben Jonson.

GRUTCH. n. f. [from the verb.] Malice; ill-will.

In it he melted leaden bullets,
To shoot at foes, and sometimes pullets;
To whom he bore so fell a grutch,
He ne'er gave quarter to any such. Hudibras.

GRY. n. f. [γρύ.] Any thing of little value; as, the paring of the nails.

GUAIA'CUM. n. f.

Guaicum is attenuant and aperient. It is excellent in many chronick cases, and was once famous for curing the venereal disease, which it still does singly in warmer climates, but with us we find it insufficient. We have a resin of it, improperly called gum guaicum. Hill.

GUARANTEE. n. f. [garant, French.] A power who undertakes to see stipulations performed.

God, the great guarantee for the peace of mankind, where laws cannot secure it, may think it the concern of his providence. South.

A prince distinguished by being a patron of Protestants, and guarantee of the Westphalian treaty. Addison on the War.

An oath is a promise made to God, and God is our superior, superior to kings. And he is also the guarantee and avenger of all breach of faith and injustice. Leffey.

To GUA'RANTY. v. a. [garantir, French.] To undertake to secure the performance of any articles.

To GUARD. v. a. [garder, French; from our word ward, the w being changed by the French, into g; as Galles for Wales.]

GUAR'DIAN. n. f. [gardien, French, from guard.]

1. One that has the care of an orphan; one who is to supply the want of parents.

I am sorry for her, as I have just cause, being her uncle and her guardian. Shakefp. Much Ado.

When perjur'd guardians, proud with impious gains,

Choak up the streets, too narrow for their trains! Dryden.

Hocus, with two other of the guardians, thought it their duty to take care of the interest of the three girls. Arbutnot.

2. One to whom the care and preservation of any thing is committed.

I gave you all,
Made you my guardians, my depositaries;
But kept a reservation to be follow'd

With such a number. Shakefp. King Lear.

It then becomes the common concern of all that have truth at heart, and more especially of those who are the appointed guardians of the Christian faith, to be upon the watch against seducers. Waterland.

3. A repository or storehouse.

Where is Duncan's body.

—Carried to Colmekill,

The sacred storehouse of his predecessors
And guardian of their bones. Shakefp.

GUARDIAN of the Spiritualities. He to whom the spiritual jurisdiction of any diocese is committed, during the vacancy of the see. He may be either guardian in law, or jure magistratus, as the archbishop is of any diocese within his province; or guardian by delegation, as he whom the archbishop or vicar-general doth for the time depute. Cowel.

GUA'RNIAN. adj. Performing the office of a kind protector or superintendant.

My charming patroness protects me unseen, like my guardian angel; and shuns my gratitude like a fairy, who is bountiful by stealth, and conceals the giver when she bestows the gift. Dryden.

Thus shall mankind his guardian care engage.

The promis'd father of the future age. Pope.

Moan while Minerva, in her guardian care,

Shoots from the starry vaults through fields of air. Pope.

GUA'RDIANSHIP. n. f. [from guardian.]

The office of a guardian.

The curate stretch'd his patent for the cure of souls, to a kind of tutelary guardianship over goods and chattels. L'Estrange.

This holds true, not only in losses and indignities offered to ourselves, but also in the case of trust, when they are offered to others who are committed to our care and guardianship. Kettlewell.

Theseus is the first who established the popular state in Athens, assigning to himself the guardianship of the laws, and chief commands in war. Swift.

GUA'RDLESS. adj. [from guard.] Without defence.

So on the guardless herd, their keeper slain, Rushes a tyger in the Lybian plain. Waller.

A rich land, guardless and undefended, must needs have been a double incitement. South.

GUA'RDSHIP. n. f. [from guard.]

1. Care; protection.

How blest'd am I, by such a man led!
Under whose wife and careful guardship

I now despise fatigue and hardship. Swift.

2. [Guard and ship.] A king's ship to guard the coast.

GUAIA'VA. } n. f. An American fruit,

GUA'VA. } The fruit, says Sir Hans Sloane, is extremely delicious and wholesome. They have only this inconvenience, that being very astringent, they stop up the belly, if taken in great quantities.

GUBERNA'TION. n. f. [gubernatio, Latin.]

Government; superintendency; superiour direction.

Perhaps there is little or nothing in the government of the kingdoms of nature and grace, but what is transacted by the man Jesus, inhabited by the divine power and wisdom, and employed as a medium or conscious instrument of this extensive gubernation. Watts.

GUDGEON. n. f. [goujon, French.]

1. A small fish found in brooks and rivers, easily caught, and therefore made a proverbial name for a man easily cheated.

'Tis true, no turbot dignify my boards;
But gudgeons, flounders, what my Thames affords. Pope.

2. A

2. A man easily cheated.

This he did to draw you in, like so many gudgeons, to swallow his false arguments. Swift.

3. Something to be caught to a man's own disadvantage: a bait; an allurement: gudgeons being commonly used as baits for pike.

But fish not with this melancholy bait,
For this fool's gudgeon, this opinion. Shakef.

GUERDON. n. f. [guerdon, gardon, French.]

A reward; a recompense, in a good and bad sense. A word now no longer in use.

But to the virgin comes, who all this while Amazed stands herself so mock'd to see,
By him who had the guerdon of his guile,
For so misfeigning her true knight to be. Spenser.

He shall by thy revenging hand, at once receive
The just guerdon of all his former villainies. Knolles.

Fame is the spur that the clear spirit doth raise.

To scorn delights, and live labourious days,
But the fair guerdon when we hope to find,
And think to burst out into sudden blaze,

Comes the blind fury, with th' abhorred sheers,
And splits the thin-spun life. Milton.

TO GUESS. v. a. [ghissen, Dutch.]

1. To conjecture; to judge without any certain principles of judgment.

Incapable and shallow innocents!
You cannot guess who caus'd your father's death. Shakef.

Let not your ears despise my tongue for ever,
Which shall possess them with the heaviest sound
—Hum! I guess at it. Shakef. Macbeth.

He that, by reason of his swift motions, can inform himself of all places and preparations, should he not very often guess rightly of things to come,
where God pleaseth not to give impediment?

Raleigh's History.

There issue swarming bands
Of ambush'd men, whom, by their arms and dress,
To be Taxcallan enemies I guess. Dryden.

The same author ventures to guess at the particular fate which would attend the Roman government. Swift.

Nor can imagination guess
How that ungrateful charming maid
My purest passion has betray'd. Swift.

2. To conjecture rightly, or upon some just reason.

One may guess by Plato's writings, that his meaning, as to the inferior deities, was, that they who would have them might, and they who would not,
might let them alone; but that himself had a right opinion concerning the true God. Stillingfleet.

TO GUESS. v. a. To hit upon by accident; to determine rightly of any thing without certain direction of the judgment.

If Xerxes was able to call every common soldier by his name in his army, it may be guessed he got not this wonderful ability by learning his lesson by heart. Locke.

GUESS. n. f. [from the verb.] Conjecture; judgment without any positive or certain grounds.

The enemy's in view; draw up your powers.
Hard is the guess of their true strength and forces. Shakef.

His guess was usually as near to prophecy as any man's. Fell.

A poet must confess
His art's like physick, but a happy guess. Dryd.

It is a wrong way of proceeding to venture a greater good for a less, upon uncertain guesses, before a due examination. Locke.

We may make some guess at the distinction of things, into those that are according to, above, and contrary to reason. Locke.

This problem yet, this offspring of a guess,
Let us for once a child of truth confess. Prior.

Norman is blest by accident, or guess,
True wisdom is the price of happiness. Young.

GUESSER. n. f. [from guess.] Conjecturer; one who judges without certain knowledge.

It is the opinion of divers good guessers, that the last fit will not be more violent than advantageous. Pope.

If fortune should please but to take such a crotchet,
To thee I apply, great Smedley's successor,
To give thee lawn sleeves, a mitre and rochet,
Whom would'st thou resemble? I leave thee a guesser. Swift.

GUESSINGLY. adv. [from guessing.] Conjecturally; uncertainly. Not in use.

I have a letter guessingly set down. Shakef.

GUEST. n. f. [ȝeȝt, ȝite, Saxon; gwest, Welsh.]

1. One entertained in the house or at the table of another.

They all murmured, saying, that he was gone to be guest with a man that is a sinner. Luke, xix. 7.

Methinks a father
Is, at the nuptial of his son, a guest
That best becomes the table. Shakef.

Tell my royal guest—
I add to his commands my own request. Dryden.

2. A stranger; one who comes newly to reside.

O defarts, defarts! how fit a guest am I for you,
since my heart can people you with wild ravenous beasts, which in you are wanting? Sidney.

Those happiest smiles
That play'd on her ripe lip, seem'd not to know What guests were in her eyes; which parted thence
As pearls from diamonds dropt. Shakespeare.

GUEST-RITE. n. f. [from guest and rite.]
Offices due to a guest.
Ulysses so dear
A gift esteem'd it, that he would not bear
In his black fleet that guest-rite to the war. Chapman.

GUESTCHAMBER. n. f. [gnest and chamber.]
Chamber of entertainment.
Where is the guestchamber, where I shall eat the passover with my disciples? Mark. xiv. 14.

TO GUGGLE. v. n. [gorgolaire, Italian.]
To sound as water running with inter-missions out of a narrowmouthed vessel.

GUIDAGE. n. f. [from guide.] The reward given to a guide. Ainsworth.

GUIDANCE. n. f. [from guide.] Direction; government.
They charge me with neglecting the guidance of wiser men. Spenser.

As to these who lived under the guidance of reason alone, without the assistance of supernatural light, it is highly probable that miracles, or a message from the dead would persuade them. Atterbury.

Particular application must be left to Christian prudence, under the guidance of God's holy spirit, who knows our necessity before we ask, and our ignorance in asking. Rogers.

This to the young—but thy experienc'd age
Wants not the guidance of a former sage. Sewel.

A prince ought not to be under the guidance or influence of either faction, because he declines from his office of presiding over the whole to be the head of a party. Swift.

TO GUIDE. v. a. [guider, French.]

1. To direct in a way.

When the spirit of truth is come, he will guide
you into all truth. Jo. xvi. 13.

The new light served to guide them to their neighbours coffers. Decay of Piety.

Whoever has a faithful friend to guide him in the dark passages of life, may carry his eyes in another man's head, and yet see never the worse. South.

2. To influence.

Upon these, or such like secular maxims, when nothing but the interest of this world guides men, they many times conclude that the slightest wrongs are not to be put up. Kettlewell.

3. To govern by counsel; to instruct.

For thy name's sake lead me and guide me. Pf. xxi. 3.

4. To regulate; to superintend.

Women neglect that which St. Paul assigns them as their proper business, the guiding of the house. Decay of Piety.

GUIDE. n. f. [guide, French, from the verb.]

1. One who directs another in his way.

Thou gavest them a burning pillar of fire to be a guide of the unknown journey. Wisd. xviii. 3.

Can knowledge have no bound, but must advance
So far to make us wish for ignorance?

And rather in the dark to grope our way,
Than, led by a false guide to err by day? Denham.

2. One who directs another in his conduct.

While yet but young, his father dy'd,
And left him to an happy guide. Waller.

They have all the same pastoral guides appointed, authorised, sanctified, and set apart by the appointment of God by the direction of the spirit, to direct and lead the people of God in the same way of eternal salvation. Pearson.

3. Director; regulator.

Who the guide of nature, but only the God of nature? In him we live, move, and are. Those things which nature is said to do, are by divine art performed, using nature as an instrument: nor is there any such knowledge divine in nature herself working, but in the guide of nature's work. Hooker.

Some truths are not by reason to be tried,
But we have sure experience for our guide. Dryden.

GUIDELESS. adj. [from guide.] Having no guide; wanting a governor or superintendant.

Th' ambitious Swede, like restless billows tost,
Though in his life he blood and ruin breath'd,
To his now guideless kingdom peace bequeath'd. Dryden.

There fierce winds o'er dusky valleys blow,
Whose every puff bears empty shades away,
Which guideless in those dark dominions stray. Dryden.

GURDER. n. f. [from guide.] Director;
regulator; guide. Obsolete.

Our guider come! to the Roman camp conduct us. Shakef.

That person, that being provoked by excessive pain, thrust his dagger into his body, and thereby, instead of reaching his vitals, opened an impost-hume, the unknown cause of all his pain, and so stabbed himself into perfect health and ease, surely had great reason to acknowledge chance for his chi-rurgeon, and Providence for the guider of his hand. South.

GUIDON. n. f. [French.] A standard-bearer; a standard. Obsolete.

GUILD. n. f. [ȝilȝip, Saxon, a fellowship, a corporation.] A society; a corporation; a fraternity or company, combined together by orders and laws made among themselves by their prince's license. Hence the common word gild or guildhall proceeds, being a fraternity or commonalty of men gathered into one combination, supporting their common charge by mutual contribution. Corwell.

Towards three or four o'clock
Look for the news that the guild hall affords. Shakef. Rich. III.

In woolen cloth it appears, by those ancient guilds that were settled in England for this manufacture, that this kingdom greatly flourished in that art. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

As when the long-ear'd milky mothers wait
At some sick miser's triple bolted gate,
For their defrauded absent foals they make
A moan so loud, that all the guild awake. Pope.

GUILE. n. f. [guille, gille old French,
the same with wile.] Deceitful cunning;
insidious artifice; mischievous subtilty.

With

G U I

With fawning words he courted her awhile,
And looking lovely, and oft sighing sore,
Her constant heart did court with divers guile;
But words and looks, and sighs she did abhor.

Spenser.

When I have most need to employ a friend,
Deep, hollow, treacherous, and full of guile,
Be he to me! This do I beg of heav'n,
When I am cold in zeal to you or yours.

Shakespeare.

We may, with more successful hope resolve
To wage by force or guile eternal war.
Nor thou his malice and false guile condemn:
Subtle he needs must be who could seduce Angels.

Milton's Paradise Lost.

GUILEFUL. adj. [guile and full.]

1. Wily; insidious; mischievously artful.

The way not to be inveigled by them that are so guileful through skill, is thoroughly to be instructed in that which maketh skilful against guile.

Hooker.

Without expence at all,
By guileful fair words, peace may be obtain'd.

Shakespeare. Henry VI.

He saw his guileful act
By Eve, though all unwitting, seconded
Upon her husband.
The guileful phantom now forsook the shroud,
And flew sublime, and vanish'd in a cloud.

Dryden's Æn.

2. Treacherous; secretly mischievous.

I train'd thy brethren to that guileful hole,
Where the dead corps of Bassianus lay.

Shakespeare.

GUILEFULLY. adv. [from guileful.] Insidiously; treacherously.

To whom the tempter guilefully reply'd.

Milton.

GUILEFULNESS. n. s. [from guileful.] Secret treachery; tricking cunning.

GUILELESS. adj. [from guile.] Free from deceit; void of insidiousness; simply honest.

GUILER. n. s. [from guile. See BE-GUILE.] One that betrays into danger
by insidious practices.

But he was wary wife in all his way,
And well perceived his deceitful sleight;
He suffered luit his safety to betray;
So goodly did beguile the guiler of the prey.

Spenser.

GUILT. n. s. [guilt, Saxon, originally signified the fine or mulct paid for an offence, and afterwards the offence itself.]

1. The state of a man justly charged with a crime; the contrary to innocence.

It was neither guilt of crime, nor reason of state, that could quench the envy that was upon the king for this execution.

Bacon's Henry VII.

When these two are taken away, the possibility of guilt, and the possibility of innocence, what restraint can the belief of the creed lay upon any man.

Hammond on Fundamentals.

2. A crime; an offence.

Clofe pent up guilts
Rive your concealing continents, and ask
These dreadful summoners grace.

Shakespeare.

GUILTILY. adv. [from guilty.] Without innocence; without clearness of conscience.

Bloody and guilty; guiltily awake,
And in a bloody battle end thy days:
Think on lord Hastings, and despair, and die.

Shakespeare. Rich. III.

GUILTINESS. n. s. [from guilty.] The state of being guilty; wickedness; consciousness of crime.

He thought his flight rather to proceed of a fearful guiltiness than of an humble faithfulness.

Sidney.

The last was I that felt thy tyranny,
O, in the battle think on Buckingham,
And die in terror of thy guiltiness.

Shakespeare.

I should be guiltier than my guiltiness.

Shakespeare.

G U I

GUILTLESS. adj. [from guilt.] Innocent; free from crime.

I am in this commanded to deliver
The noble duke of Clarence to your hands:
I will not reason what is meant hereby,
Because I will be guiltless of the meaning.

Shakespeare.

Many worthy and chaste dames thus,
All guiltless, meet reproach.

Shakespeare. Otello.

Then shall the man be guiltless from iniquity, and this woman shall bear her iniquity.

Num. v. 31.

Thou, who do'st all thou wishest at thy will,
And never wilt'st aught but what is right,
Preserve this guiltless blood they seek to spill;
Thine be my kingdom.

Fairfax.

Guiltless of greatness, thus he always pray'd,
Nor knew nor wish'd he that those vows he made
On his own head should be at last repaid.

Dryden.

The teeming earth yet guiltless of the plough,
And unprovok'd did fruitful stores allow.

Dryden.

Thou know'st how guiltless first I met thy flame,
When love approach'd me under friendship's name.

Pope.

GUILTLESSLY. adv. [from guiltless.] Without guilt; innocently.

GUILTLESSNESS. n. s. [from guiltless.]
Innocence; freedom from crime.

A good number, trusting to their number more than to their value, and valuing money higher than equity, felt that guiltlessness is not always with ease oppressed.

Sidney.

I would not have had any hand in his death, of whose guiltlessness I was better assured than any man living could be.

King Charles.

GUILTY. adj. [guiltig, Saxon, one condemned to pay a fine for an offence.]

1. Justly chargeable with a crime; not innocent.

Is there not a ballad of the king and the beggar?
—The world was guilty of such a ballad some three ages since.

Shakespeare. Love's Labour Lost.

Mark'd you not
How that the guilty kindred of the queen
Look'd pale, when they did hear of Clarence' death?

Shakespeare.

We are verily guilty concerning our brother, in that we saw the anguish of his soul when he besought us, and we would not hear.

Gen. xlii. 21.

With mortal hatred I pursu'd his life,
Nor he, nor you, were guilty of the strife;
Nor I, but as I lov'd; yet all combin'd,
Your beauty and my impotence of mind.

Dryden.

Farewel the stones
And threshold, guilty of my midnight moans.

Dryden.

There is no man, that is knowingly wicked, but is guilty to himself; and there is no man that carries guilt about him, but he receives a sting into his soul.

Tillotson.

2. Wicked; corrupt.

All the tumults of a guilty world,
Tost by ungenerous passion, sinks away.

Thomson.

GUINEA. n. s. [from Guinea, a country in Africa, abounding with gold.]
A gold coin valued at one and twenty shillings.

By the word gold I must be understood to design a particular piece of matter; that is, the last guinea that was coined.

Locke.

Ladies, whose love is constant as the wind:
Cits, who prefer a guinea to mankind.

Young.

GUINEADROPPER. n. s. [guinea and drop.]
One who cheats by dropping guineas.

Who now the guineadrop's bait regards,
Trick'd by the sharper's dice, or juggler's cards.

Gay.

GUINEAHEN. n. s. A fowl, supposed to be of Guinea.

GUINEAPEPPER. n. s. [capsicum, Latin.]
A plant.

Miller.

GUINEAPIG. n. s. A small animal with a pig's snout, brought, I believe, from Africa.

G U L

GUISE. n. s. [The same with wife, guise, French; pyra, Saxon, the p or w being changed, as is common, into g.]

1. Manner; mien; habit; cast of behaviour.

His own fire, and master of his guise,
Did often tremble at his horrid view.

Spenser.

Thus women know, and thus they use the guise,
T' enchant the valiant and beguile the wise.

Fairf.

Lo you; here she comes: this is her very guise;
and, upon my life, fast asleep: observe her, stand close.

Shakespeare. Macbeth.

They stand a horrid front
Of dreadful length, and dazzling arms in guise
Of warriors old, with order'd spear and shield,
Awaiting what command their mighty chief
Had to impose.

Milton's Paradise Lost.

By their guise
Just men they seem, and all their study bent
To worship God a-right.

Milton's Paradise Lost.

Back, shepherds, back:
Here be without duck or nod,
Other trippings to be trod,
Of lighter toes and such court guise
As Mercury did first devise.

Milton.

Their external shapes are notoriously accommodated to that law or guise of life that nature has designed them.

More.

2. Practice; custom; property.

I have drunk wine past my usual guise;
Strong wine commands the foole, and moves the wife.

Chap.

This would not be slept;
Old guise must be kept.

Ben Jonson.

The swain reply'd, it never was our guise
To slight the poor, or aught humane despise.

Pope.

3. External appearance; dress.

When I was very young, nothing was so much talked of as rickets among children, and consumptions among young people: after these the spleen came in play, and then the scurvy, which was the general complaint, and both were thought to appear in many various guises.

Temple.

The Hugonots were engaged in a civil war, by the specious pretences of some, who under the guise of religion, sacrificed so many thousands to their own ambition.

Swift.

GUIA'R. n. s. [guitar, Italian. guitarre, French.] A stringed instrument of musick.

Sallads and eggs, and lighter fare,
Tune the Italian spark's guitar.

Prior.

GULCH. } n. s. [from gulo, Latin.] A GU'LCHEIN. } little glutton.

Skinner.

GULES. adj. [perhaps from gonle, the throat.] Red: a barbarous term of heraldry.

Follow thy drum;
With man's blood paint the ground: gules, gules:
Religious canons, civil laws are cruel;
Then what should war be?

Shakespeare's Timon.

He whose sable arms,
Black as his purpose, did the knight resemble,
When he laid couched in the ominous horse,
Hath now his dread and black complexion smear'd
With heraldry more dismal; head to foot,
Now he is total gules.

Shakespeare.

GULF. n. s. [golfo, Italian.]

1. A bay; an opening into land.

The Venetian admiral withdrew himself farther off from the island Cursu, into the gulf of the Adriatick.

Kneller.

2. An abyss; an unmeasurable depth.

Thence turning back, in silence soft they stole,
And brought the heavy corse with easy pace
To yawning gulph of deep Avernus' hole.

Spens.

I know thou'dst rather Follow thine enemy in a fiery gulph,
Than flatter him in a bower.

Shakespeare.

This is the gulf through which Virgil's Ælecto shoots herself into hell; the fall of waters, the woods that encompass it, are all in the description.

Addis.

The sea could not be much narrower than it is,
Without a great loss to the world; and must we now have an ocean of mere flats and shallows, to the utter

utter ruin of navigation, for fear our heads should turn giddy at the imagination of gaping abysses and unfathomable gulfs? Bentley.

3. A whirlpool, a sucking eddy.

England his approaches makes as fierce
As waters to the sucking of a gulf. Shakefp.

4. Any thing insatiable, as the mouth or stomach.

Scull of dragon, tooth of wolf,
Witches mummy; maw and gulf
Of the ravening salt sea shark;
Root of hemlock, digg'd i' th' dark. Shakefp.

GU'LFY. adj. [from gulf.] Full of gulfs or whirlpools; vorticosus.

Rivers arise; whether thou be the son
Of utmost Tweed, or Ouse, or gulfy Dun. Milton.

At their native realms the Greeks arriv'd,
All who the war of ten long years surviv'd,
And scap'd the perils of the gulfy main. Pope.

High o'er a gulfy sea the Pharian isle Fronts the deep roar of disemboguing Nile. Pope.

GU'LL. v. a. [guiller, to cheat, old French.] To trick: to cheat; to defraud; to deceive.

If I do not gull him into a nay word, and make him a common recreation, do not think I have wit enough to lie straight in my bed. Shakespeare.

Yet love these forc'd cries did remove, and move
Thee to gull thine own mother for my love. Donne.

He would have gull'd him with a trick,
But Mart was too too politick. Hudibras.

They are not to be gull'd twice with the same trick. L'Estrange.

The Roman people were grossly gull'd twice or thrice over, and as often enslaved in one century, and under the same pretence of reformation. Dryden.

By their designing leaders taught,
The vulgar, gull'd into rebellion, arm'd. Dryden.

For this advantage age from youth has won,
As not to be out-riden, though out-run;

By fortune he was now to Venus trin'd,
And with stern Mars in Capricorn was join'd:

Of him disposing in his own abode,
He sooth'd the goddess, while he gull'd the god. Dryden.

GULL. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. [Mergus.] A sea-bird.

2. A cheat; a fraud; a trick.

I should think this a gull, but that the white-bearded fellow speaks it. Shakespeare's Much Ado.

Either they have these excellencies they are praised for, or they have not; if they have not, 'tis an apparent cheat and gull. Government of the Tongue.

3. A stupid animal; one easily cheated.

Being fed by us you us'd us so,
As that ungentle gull, the cuckow bird,
Useth the sparrow. Shakefp. Henry IV.

Why have you suffer'd me to be imprison'd,
Kept in a dark house, visited by the priest,
And made the most notorious geek and gull
That e'er invention plaid on? Shak. Twelfth Night.

That paltry story is untrue,
And forg'd to cheat such gulls as you. Hudibras.

GU'LLCATCHER. n. f. [gull and catch.] A cheat; a man of trick; one who catches silly people.

Here comes my noble gullcatcher. Shakespeare.

GULLER. n. f. [from gull.] A cheat; an impostor.

GU'LLERY. n. f. [from gull.] Cheat; imposture. Ainsworth.

GU'LLET. n. f. [goulet, French; gula, Lat.]

1. The throat; the passage through which the food passes; the meat-pipe; the oesophagus.

It might be his doom,
One day to sing
With gullet in string. Denham.

Many have the gullet or feeding channel which have no lungs or windpipes; as fishes which have gills, whereby the heart is refrigerated; for such thereof as have lungs and respiration are not without whizzos, as whales and cetaceous animals. Brown's Vulg. Err.

2. A small stream or lake. Not in use.

Nature has various tender muscles plac'd,
By which the artful gullet is embrac'd. Blackmore.

The liquor in the stomach is a compound of that which is separated from its inward coat, the spittle which is swallowed, and the liquor which distils from the gullet. Arbutnot.

The Euxine sea and the Mediterranean, small gullets, if compared with the ocean. Helyyn.

GU'LLY. v. n. [corrupted from gurgle.] To run with noise.

GU'LP. v. a. [golpen, Dutch.] To swallow eagerly; to suck down without intermission.

He loosens the fish, gulps it down, and so soon as ever the morsel was gone wipes his mouth. L'Estr.

I see the double flaggon charge their hand;
See them puff off the froth, and gulp amain,
While with dry tongue I lick my lips in vain. Gay.

GULP. n. f. [from the verb] As much as can be swallowed at once.

In deep suspirations we take more large gulps of air to cool our heart, overcharged with love and sorrow. More.

As oft as he can catch a gulp of air,
And peep above the seas, he names the fair. Dryd.

GUM. n. f. [gumma, Latin.]

1. A vegetable substance differing from a resin, in being more viscid and less friable, and generally dissolving in aqueous menstruums; whereas resins, being more sulphurous, require a spirituous dissolvent.

One whole eyes,
Albeit unused to the melting mood,
Dropp'd tears as fast as the Arabian trees
Their medicinal gum. Shakespeare's Othello.

He ripens spices, fruit, and precious gum,
Which from remotest regions hither come. Waller.

Her maiden train,
Who bore the vests that holy rites require,
Incense, and od'rous gums, and cover'd fire. Dryden.

2. [Loma, Saxon; gumme, Dutch.] The fleshy covering that invests and contains the teeth.

The babe that milks me,
I'd pluck my nipple from his boneless gums.
Sh' untwists a wire, and from her gums
A set of teeth completely comes. Swift.

GU'. v. a. [from the noun.] To close with gum; to smear with gum.

The eyelids are apt to be gummed together with a viscous humour. Wifeman's Surgery.

GUMMO'SITY. n. f. [from gummosus.] The nature of gum; gumminess.

Sugar and honey make windy liquours, and the elastick fermenting particles are detained by their innate gummosity. Floyer.

GU'MMOUS. adj. [from gum.] Of the nature of gum.

Observations concerning English amber, and relations about the amber of Prussia, prove that amber is not a gummosus or resinous substance drawn out of trees by the sun's heat, but a natural fossil. Woodward.

GU'MMY. adj. [from gum.]

1. Consisting of gum; of the nature of gum.

From the utmost end of the head branches there issueth out a gummy juice, which hangeth downward like a cord. Raleigh.

Nor all the gummy stores Arabia yields. Dryden.

How each arising alder now appears,
And o'er the Po distils her gummy tears. Dryden.

2. Productive of gum.

The clouds
Tine the slant lightnings; whose thwart flame driv'n down, Kindles the gummy bark of fir and pine. Milton.

3. Overgrown with gum.

The yawning youth, scarce half awake, essays
His lazy limbs and dozy head to raise;
Then rubs his gummy eyes, and scrubs his pate. Dryden.

GUN. n. f. [Of this word there is no satisfactory etymology. Mr. Lye observes that gun in Iceland signifies battle; but when guns came into use we had no commerce with Iceland. May not gun come by gradual corruption from canne, ganne, gunne? Canne is the original of cannon.]

The general name for fire-arms; the instrument from which shot is discharged by fire.

These dread curses, like the sun 'gainst glass,
Or like an overcharged gun, recoil
And turn upon thyself. Shakespeare's Henry VI.

The Emperor, smiling, said that never Emperor was yet slain with a gun. Knolles's History.

The bullet flying, makes the gun recoil. Cleavel.

In vain the dart or glitt'ring sword we shun, Condemn'd to perish by the slaughter'ing gun. Granville.

GU'N.

G U S

GU'NSTONE. n. f. [gun and stone.] The shot of cannon. They used formerly to shoot stones from artillery.

Tell the pleasant prince, this mock of his Hath turn'd his ball to gunstones, and his soul
Shall stand fore charged for the wasteful vengeance
That shall fly with them. Shakefp. Henry V.

GU'NWALE, or GUNNEL of a Ship. n. f.
'That piece of timber which reaches on either side of the ship from the half deck to the fore-castle, being the uppermost bend which finisheth upper works of the hull in that part, and wherein they put the stanchions which support the waste tree; and this is called the gunwale, whether there be guns in the ship or no; and the lower part of any port, where any ordnance are, is also termed the gunwale.
Harris.

GURGE. n. f. [gurgus, Latin.] Whirlpool;

gurnet: I have misus'd the King's preb damnably.
Shakefp. Henry V.

To GUSH, v. n. [gosselen, Dutch.]

1. To flow or rush out with violence; not to spring in a small stream, but in a larger body.

A sea of blood gush'd from the gaping wound,
That her gay garments stain'd with filthy gore.
Spenser.

The covering of this abyss was broken asunder,
and the water gush'd out that made the deluge.
Burnet.

Incessant streams of thin magnetick rays
Gush from their fountains with impetuous force,
In either pole, then take an adverse course.
Blackmore.

On either hand the gushing waters play,
And down the rough cascade white dashing fall.
Thomson.

2. To emit in a copious effluxion.

The gaping wound gush'd out a crimson flood.
Dryden.

Line after line my gushing eyes o'erflow,
Led through a sad variety of woe. Pope.

GUSH. n. f. [from the verb.] An emission of liquor in a large quantity at once;
the liquor so emitted.

If a lung-vein be burst'd, generally at the first cough a great gush of blood is coughed up. Harvey.

Destroy all creatures for thy sport or gust,
Yet cry, if man's unhappy, God's unjust. Pope.

2. Height of perception; height of sensual enjoyment.

'They fondly thinking to allay
Their appetite with gust, instead of fruit
Chew'd bitter ashes, which th' offended taste
With spattering noise rejected. Milton.

G U T

Where love is duty on the female side,
On theirs meer sensual gust, and fought with fury pride. Dryden's Fables.

My sight, and smell, and hearing were employ'd,
And all three senses in full gust enjoy'd. Dryden.

3. Love; liking.

To kill, I grant, is sin's extremest gust;
But, in defence, by mercy 'tis made just. Shakefp.

Old age shall do the work of taking away both the gust and comfort of them. L'Estrange.

We have lost, in a great measure the gust and relish of true happiness. Tillotson.

4. Turn of fancy; intellectual taste.

The principal part of painting is to find what nature has made most proper to this art, and a choice of it may be made according to the gust and manner of the ancients. Dryden.

5. [From guster, Islandick.] A sudden violent blast of wind.

She led calm Henry, though he were a king,
As doth a sail, fill'd with a fretting gust,
Command an argosie to stem the waves. Shakefp.

You may as well forbid the mountain pines
To wag their high tops, and to make a noise,
When they are fretted with the gusts of heav'n.
Shakefp.

Presently come forth swarms and volleys of libels, which are the gusts of liberty of speech restrained.
Bacon's Henry VII.

As when fierce northern blasts from th' Alps
descend,

From his firm roots with struggling gusts to rend
An aged sturdy oak. Denham.

Part stay for passage, 'till a gust of wind
Ships o'er their forces in a shining sheet. Dryden.

Pardon a weak disemper'd soul, that swells
With sudden gusts, and sinks as soon in calms,
The sport of passions. Addison's Cato.

6. It is written in Spenser vitiously for justs, sports.

For jolly knight he seem'd, and fair did sit,
As one for knightly gusts and fierce encounters fit.
Spenser.

GU'STABLE. adj. [gusto, Latin.]

1. To be tasted.

This position informs us of a vulgar error, terming the gall bitter; whereas there is nothing gustable sweeter. Harvey.

2. Pleasant to the taste.

A gustable thing, seen or smelt, excites the appetite, and affects the glands and parts of the mouth.
Derham.

GUSTA'TION. n. f. [gusto, Latin.] The act of tasting.

The gullet and conveying parts partake of the nerves of gustation, or appertaining unto savor.
Brown.

GU'STFUL. adj. [gust and full.] Tasteful;
well-tasted.

What he defaults from some dry insipid sin, is but to make up for some other more gustful.
Decay of Piety.

In reading what I have written, let them bring no particular gusto along with them. Dryden.

GU'STY. adj. [from gust.] Stormy; tempesttuous.

Once upon a raw and gusty day,
The troubled Tyber chafing with his shores.
Shakefp. Jul. Cæs.

Or whirl'd tempestuous by the gusty wind.
Thomson.

GUT. n. f. [kutteln, German.]

1. The long pipe reaching with many convolutions from the stomach to the vent.

This lord wears his wit in his belly, and his guts
in his head. Shakefp. Troilus and Cressida.

G U T

A vial should have a lay of wire-strings below, close to the belly, and then the strings of guts mounted upon a bridge, that by this means the upper strings stricken should make the lower resound.
Bacon's Natural History.

The intestines or guts may be inflamed by any acid or poisonous substance taken inwardly.
Arbutnot on Diet.

2. The stomach; the receptacle of food:
proverbially.

And cram'd them till their guts did ache,
With cawdle, custard, and plum-cake. Hudibras.

With false weights their servants guts they cheat,
And pinch their own to cover the deceit. Dryden.

3. Gluttony; love of gormandising.

Apicius, thou didst on thy guts bestow
Full ninety millions; yet, when this was spent,
Ten millions still remain'd to thee; which thou,
Fearing to suffer thirst and famishment,
In poison'd potion drank't. Hakewill on Provid.

To GUT, v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To eviscerate; to draw; to exenterate.

The fishermen save the most part of their fish:
some are gutted, splitted, powdered, and dried.
Carew's Cornwall.

2. To plunder of contents.

In Nero's arbitrary time,
When virtue was a guilt, and wealth a crime,
A troop of cut-throat guards were sent to seize
The rich men's goods, and gut their palaces. Dryd.

Tom Brown of facetious memory, having gutted a proper name of its vowels, used it as freely as he pleased. Addison.

GU'TTATED. adj. [from gutta, Latin, a drop.] Besprinkled with drops; be-dropped. Diæ.

GU'TTER. n. f. [from guttur, a throat,
Latin.]

1. A passage for water; a passage made by water.

These gutter tiles are in length ten inches and a half. Moxon.

Rocks rise one above another, and have deep gutters worn in the sides of them by torrents of rain.
Addison on Italy.

2. A small longitudinal hollow.

To GU'TTER, v. a. [from the noun.] To cut in small hollows.

Tempests themselves, high seas, and howling
winds,

The gutter'd rocks, and congregated sands,
Traitors ensteep'd to clog the guiltless keel,
As having sense of beauty, do omit
Their mortal natures, letting safe go by The divine Desdemona. Shakefp. Othello.

My cheeks are gutter'd with my fretting tears.
Sandys.

First in a place, by nature close, they build
A narrow flooring, gutter'd, wall'd, and ul'd
Dryden.

To GU'TTLE, v. n. [from gut.] To feed luxuriously; to gormandise. A low word.

His jolly brother, opposite in sense,
Laughs at his thrift; and, lavish of expence,
Quaffs, crams, and guttles in his own defence.
Dryden.

To GU'TTLE, v. a. [from gut.] To swallow. A low word.

The fool did spit in his porridge, to try if they'd hiss: they did not hiss, and so he guttled them up, and scalded his chops. L'Estrange.

GU'TTLER. n. f. [from guttle.] A greedy eater.

GU'TTULOUS. adj. [from guttula, Latin.]
In the form of a small drop.

Ice is plain upon the surface of the water, but round in hail, which is also a glaciation, and figured in its guttulous descent from the air. Brown's Vulg. Err.

GU'TTURAL. adj. [gutturalis, Latin.] Pronounced with the throat; belonging to the throat.

GYB

The Hebrews have assigned which letters are labial, which dental, and which guttural. Bacon.

In attempting to pronounce the nasals, and some of the vowels spirally, the throat is brought to labour, and makes that which we call a guttural pronunciation. Helder.

GU'TTURALNESS. n. f. [from guttural.] The quality of being guttural.

GU'TWORT. n. f. [gut and wort.] An herb.

GUY. n. f. [from guide.] A rope used to lift any thing into the ship. Skinner.

To GU'ZZLE. v. n. [from gut, or gust, to guttle or guffle.] To gormandise; to feed immoderately; to swallow any liquor greedily.

Well season'd bowls the gossip's spirits raise,
Who while she guzzles chats the doctor's praise. Roscommon.

They fell to lapping and guzzling, till they burst themselves. L'Estrange.

No more her care shall fill the hollow tray,
To sat the guzzling hogs with floods of whey. Gay.

To GU'ZZLE. v. a. To swallow with immoderate gust.

The Pylian king
Was longest liv'd of any two-legg'd thing,
Still guzzling must of wine. Dryden.

GU'ZZLER. n. f. [from guzzle.] A gormandiser; an immoderate eater or drinker.

GYBE. n. f. [See GIBE.] A sneer; a taunt; a sarcasm.

Ready in gybes, quick-answer'd, saucy, and as quarrellous as the weazel. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

To GYBE. v. n. To sneer; to taunt.

The vulgar yield an open ear,
And common courtiers love to gybe and sneer. Spenser.

GYR

GYMNA'STICALLY. adv. [from gymnastick.] Athletically; fitly for strong exercise.

Such as with agility and vigour are not gymnastically composed; nor actively use those parts. Brown.

GYMNA'STICK. adj. [γυμναστικός; gymnastique, Fr.] Pertaining to athletick exercise; consisting of leaping; wrestling, running, throwing the dart, or quoit.

The Cretans wisely forbid their servants gymnasticks as well as arms; and yet your modern footmen exercise themselves daily, whilst their enervated lords are softly lolling in their chariots. Arbutnot.

GY'MNICK. adj. [γυμνικός; gymnique, Fr.] Such as practice the athletick or gymnastick exercises.

Have they not sword-players, and ev'ry sort
Of gymnick artists, wrestlers, riders, runners? Milton.

GY'NECOCRACY. n. f. [γυναικρατία; gynecocratie, Fr.] Petticoat government; female power.

GYRA'TION. n. f. [gyro, Latin.] The act of turning any thing about.

This effluvium attenuateth and impelleth the neighbour-air, which, returning home in a gyration carrieth with it the obvious bodies in the electrick. Brown.

If a burning coal be nimbly moved round in a circle with gyrations, continually repeated, the whole circle will appear like fire; the reason of which is, that the sensation of the coal in the several places of that circle remains impressed on the sensorium, until the coal return again to the same place. Newton.

GYRE. n. f. [gyrus Latin.] A circle described by any thing moving in an orbit.

Ne thenceforth his approved skill toward,
Or strike, or hurlen round in warlike gyre,
Remember'd he; ne car'd for his fate guard,
But rudely rag'd. Spenser.

Does the wild haggard tow'r into the sky,
And to the South by thy direction fly?
Or eagle in her gyres the clouds embrace? Sandys.

He fashion'd those harmonious orbs, that roll
In restless gyres about the Artick pole. Sandys.

Quick and more quick he spins in giddy gyres,
Then falls, and in much foam his soul expires. Dryden.

GY'RED. adj. Falling in rings.

Hamlet, with his doublet all unbrac'd,
No hat upon his head, his stockings loose
Ungarter'd, and down gyred to his ankle. Shakesp.

GYVES. n. f. [gewyn, Welsh.] Fetters; chains for the legs.

The villains march wide betwixt the legs, as if they had gyves on. Shakespeare.

And knowing this, should I yet stay,
Like such as blow away their lives,
And never will redeem a day,

Enamour'd of their golden gyves? Ben Jonson.

The poor prisoners boldly starting up, break off their chains and gyves. Knolles.

Gyres and the mill had tam'd thee. Milton.

But Telamon rush'd in, and hap'd to meet
A rising root, that held his fasten'd feet;
So down he fell, whom sprawling on the ground,
His brother from the wooden gyves unbound. Dryd.

To GYVE. v. a. [from the nonn.] To fetter; to shackle; enchain; to ensnare.

With as little a web as this, will I ensnare as great A fly as Cassio. Ay, smile upon her, do. I will Gyre thee in thine own courtship. Shakesp.

HA

H Is in English, as in other languages, a note of aspiration, sounded only by a strong emission of the breath, without any conformation of the organs of speech, and is therefore by many grammarians accounted no letter. The h in English is scarcely ever mute at the beginning of a word, or where it immediately precedes a vowel; as house, behaviour: where it is followed by a consonant it has no sound, according to the present pronunciation, but anciently, as now in Scotland, it made the syllable guttural; as right, bought.

HA. interject. [ha, Latin.]

1. An expression of wonder, surprise, sudden question or sudden exertion.

You shall look fairer ere I give or hazard:
What says the golden chest? ha! let me see. Shak.

Ha! what art thou! thou horrid headless trunk!
It is my Hastings! Rowe's Jane Shore.

VOL. L

HAB

2. An expression of laughter. Used with reduplication.

He saith among the trumpets ha, ha, and he smelleth the battle afar off. Job. xxxix. 25.

Ha, ha, 'tis what so long I wish'd and vow'd;
Our plots and delusions
Have wrought such confusions,

That the monarch's a slave to the crown. Dryden.

HAAK. n. f. A fish.

HA'BEAS CORPUS. [Latin.] A writ, the which, a man indicted of some trespass, being laid in prison for the same, may have out of the King's Bench, thereby to remove himself thither at his own cost, and to answer the cause there. Cowel.

HABERDA'SHER. n. f. [This word is ingeniously deduced by Minsheu from habr dafs, German, have you this, the expression of a shopkeeper offering his wares to sale.] One who sells small wares; a pedlar.

HAB

Because these cunning men are like haberdashers of small wares, it is not amiss to set forth their shop.

A haberdasher, who was the oracle of the coffee-house, declared his opinion. Addison.

HA'BERDINE. n. f. A dried salt cod. Ains.

HA'BERGEON. n. f. [haubergeon, French; halbergium, low Lat.] Armour to cover the neck and breast; breast-plate; neck-piece; gorget.

So every one in arms was quickly dight. Fairfax.

The shot let fly, and grazing
Upon his shoulder, in the passing, Lodg'd in Magnano's brags habergeon. Hudibras.

HABI'LIMENT. n. f. [habiliment, French.] Dress; clothes; garment.

He the fairest Una found,
Strange lady, in so strange habiliments,
Teaching the satyres. Fairy Queen.

My riches are these poor habiliments,
Of which if you should here disfigure me,
You take the sum and substance that I have. Shak.

The

The clergy should content themselves with wearing gowns and other habilliments of Irish drapery. Swift.
HABI'LITATE. v. n. [habilitate, Fr.]

To qualify; to entitle. Not in use.

Divers persons in the house of commons were attainted, and thereby not legal, nor habilitate to serve in parliament, being disabled in the highest degree. Bacon.

HABILITATION. n. f. [from habilitate.]
 Qualification.

The things are but habilitations towards arms; and what is habilitation, without intention and act? Bacon.

HABI'LITY. n. f. [habilité, French.] Faculty; power: now ability.

HA'BIT. n. f. [habitus, Latin.]

1. State of any thing: as habit of body.

2. Dress; accoutrement; garment.

I shifted
 Into a madman's rags, t'assume a semblance
 The very dogs disdain'd; and in this habit
 Met I my father. Shakesp. King Lear.

If you have any justice, any pity;
 If ye be any thing but churchmen's habits. Shakesp.
 Both the poets being dressed in the same English habit, story compared with story, judgment may be made betwixt them. Dryden.

The scenes are old, the habits are the same
 We wore last year. Dryden.

Changes there are in veins of wit, like those of habits, or other modes. Temple.

There are among the statues several of Venus, in different habits. Addison on Italy.

The clergy are the only set of men who wear a distinct habit from others. Swift.

3. Habit is a power or ability in man of doing any thing, when it has been acquired by frequent doing the same thing. Locke.

He hath a better bad habit of frowning than the count Palatine. Shakesp.

4. Custom; inveterate use.

The last fatal step is, by frequent repetition of the sinful act, to continue and persist in it, 'till at length it settles into a fixed confirmed habit of sin; which being that which the apostle calls the finishing of sin, ends certainly in death; death not only as to merit, but also as to actual infiction. South.

No civil broils have since his death arose,
 But faction now by habit does obey;
 And wars have that respect for his repose,
 As winds for halcyons when they breed at sea. Dryd.

The force of education is so great, that we may mould the minds and manners of the young into what shape we please, and give the impressions of such habits as shall ever afterwards remain. Atterbury.

To HA'BIT. v. a. [from the nonn.] To dress; to accoutre; to array.

Present yourself and your fair princess Before Leontes:

She shall be habited as it becomes

The partner of your bed. Shakesp. Winter's Tale.

Having called to his memory Sir George Villiers, and the cloathes he used to wear, in which at that time he seemed to be habited, he thought him to be that person. Clarendon.

They habited themselves like those rural deities and imitated them in their rustick dances. Dryden.

HA'BITABLE. adj. [habitable, Fr. habitabilis, Lat.] Capable of being dwelt in; capable of sustaining human creatures.

By means of our solitary situation, we know well most part of the habitable world, and are ourselves unknown. Bacon.

That was her torrid and inflaming time;
 This is her habitable tropique clime. Donne.

The torrid zone is now found habitable. Cowley.

Look round the habitable world, how few Know their own good, or knowing it pursue. Dryd.

HA'BITABLENESS. n. f. [from habitable.]
 Capacity of being dwelt in.

The cutting of the Equinoctial line decides that controversy of the habitableness of the torrid zone.

Those ancient problems of the spherical roundness of the earth, the being of antipodes, and of the habitableness of the torrid zone, are abundantly demonstrated. Ray.

HABITANCE. n. f. [habitatio, Lat.] Dwelling; abode.

What art thou, man, if man at all thou art,
 That here in desert hast thine habitation?
 And these rich heaps of wealth do'tt hide apart
 From the world's eye, and from her right usance. Spenser's Faerie Queen.

HA'BITANT. n. f. [habitant, Fr. habitant, Latin.] Dweller; one that lives in any place; inhabitant.

Not to earth are those bright luminaries
 Officious; but to the earth's habitants. Milton.

Powers celestial to each other's view
 Stand still coarrest, though distant far they lie,
 Or habitants of earth, or sea, or sky. Pope.

HABITATION. n. f. [habitation, French; habitatio, Latin.]

1. The state of a place receiving dwellers.

Ampitude almost immense, with stars
 Numerous, and every star perhaps a world
 Of destin'd habitation. Milton.

2. Act of inhabiting; state of dwelling.

Palaces,
 For want of habitation and repair,
 Dissolve to heaps of ruins. Denham.

Rocks and mountains, which in the first ages were high and craggy, and consequently then inconvenient for habitation, were by continual deterration brought to a lower pitch. Woodward.

3. Place of abode; dwelling.

Wisdom, to the end she might save many, built her house of that nature which is common unto all;
 she made not this or that man her habitation, but dwelt in us. Hooker.

God oft descends to visit men
 Unseen, and through their habitations walks
 To mark their doings. Milton.

HABITATOR. n. f. [Latin.] Dweller; inhabitant.

The sun's presence is more continued unto the northern inhabitants; and the longest day in Cancer is longer unto us than that in Capricorn unto the southern habitators. Brown.

HABI'TUAL. adj. [habituel, from habit, Fr.] Customary; accustomed; inveterate; established by frequent repetition. It is used for both good and ill.

Sin, there in pow'r before
 Once actual; now in body, and to dwell Habitual habitant. Milton.

Art is properly an habitual knowledge of certain rules and maxims. South.

By length of time
 The scurf is worn away of each committed crime:
 No speck is left of their habitual stains;
 But the pure ether of the soul remains. Dryden.

'Tis impossible to become an able artist, without making your art habitual to you. Dryden.

HABI'TUALLY. adv. [from habitual.] Customarily; by habit.

Internal graces and qualities of mind sanctify our natures, and render us habitually holy. Atterbury.

To HABI'TUATE. v. a. [habituare, Fr.] To accustom; to use one's self by frequent repetition; with to.

Men are first corrupted by bad counsel and company, and next they habituare themselves to their vicious practices. Tillotson.

Such as live in a rarer air are habituare to the exercise of a greater muscular strength. Arbutnot.

HA'BITUDE. n. f. [habitus, Lat. habitude, French.]

1. Relation; respect; state with regard to something else.

We cannot conclude this complexion of nations from the vicinity or habitude they hold unto the sun. Brown.

The will of God is like a streight unalterable rule; but the various comportments of the creature, either thwarting this rule, or holding conformity to it, occasions several habitudes of this rule unto it. Hale.

It results from the very nature of things, as they stand in such a certain habitude, or relation to one another. South.

As by the objective part of perfect happiness we understand that which is best and last, and to which all other things are to be referred, so by the formal part must be understood the best and last habitude of man toward that best object. Norris.

In all the habitudes of life,
 The friend, the mistress, and the wife,
 Variety we still pursue. Dryden.

2. Familiarity; converse; frequent intercourse.

His knowledge in the noblest useful arts,
 Was such dead authors could not give;
 But habitudes with those who live. Dryden.

To write well, one must have frequent habitudes with the best company.

3. Long custom; habit; inveterate use.
 This is more properly habit.

Mankind is willing to continue in a pleasing error, strengthened by a long habitude. Dryden.

Thy ear, inured to charitable sounds,
 And pitying love, must feel the hateful wounds
 Of jest obscene, and vulgar ribaldry,
 The ill-bred question, and the leud reply,
 Brought by long habitude from bad to worse:
 Must hear the frequent oath, the direful curse. Prior.

4. The power of doing any thing acquired by frequent repetition.

It is impossible to gain an exact habitude, without an infinite number of acts and perpetual practice. Dryden.

HA'BNAB. adj. [hap ne hap, or nap; as would, ould, or ne would; will will, or ne will; that is, let it happen or not.] At random; at the mercy of chance; without any rule or certainty of effect.

He circles draws, and squares,
 With cyphers, astral characters,
 Then looks 'em o'er to understand 'em,
 Although set down habnab at random. Hudibras.

To HACK. v. a. [haccan, Saxon; hacken, Dutch; bacher, Fr. from acare, an axe, Saxon.]

1. To cut into small pieces; to chop; to cut slightly with frequent blows; to mangle with unskilful blows. It bears commonly some notion of contempt or malignity.

He put on that armour, whereof there was no one piece wanting, though hacked in some places, bewraying some fight not long since passed. Sidney.

What a slave art thou, to hack thy sword as thou hast done, and say it was in fight! Shakesp.

Richard the Second here was hack'd to death. Shakesp.

I'll fight 'till from my bones my flesh be hackt. Shakesp.

One flourishing branch of his most royal root
 Is hackt down, and his summer leaves all faded,
 By envy's hand, and murder's bloody axe. Shakesp.

Burn me, hack me, hew me into pieces. Dryden.

Not the hack'd helmet, nor the dusty field,
 But Purple vests, and flow'ry garlands please. Addis.

But fate with butchers plac'd thy priestly stall,
 Meek modern faith to murder, hack and mawl. Pope.

2. To speak unready, or with hesitation.

Disarm them, and let them question; let them keep their limbs whole, and hack our English. Shak.

To HACK. v. n. To hackney; to turn hackney or prostitute. Hanmer.

HA'CKLE. n. f. Raw silk; any flimsy substance unspun.

Take the hackle of a cock or capon's neck, or a plover's top: take off one side of the feather, and then take the hackle silk, gold or silver thread, and make these fast at the bent of the hook. Walton.

To HA'CKLE. v. a. To dress flax. HA'CKNEY.

H A G

- HA'CKNEY. n. f. [backnai, Welsh; backenege, Teutonic; baquenee, French.]
1. A pacing horse.
 2. A hired horse; hired horses being usually taught to pace, or recommended as good pacers.
Light and lewd persons were as easily suborned to make an affidavit for money, as post-horses and backneys are taken to hire. Bacon.
Who, mounted on a broom, the nag,
And backney of a Lapland hag,
In quest of you came hither post. Hudibras.
 3. An hireling; a prostitute.
Three kingdoms rung
With his accumulative and backney tongue. Ruse.
That is no more than every lover
Does for his backney lady suffer. Hudibras.
Shall each spurr'd backney of the day,
Or each new pension'd sycophant, pretend
To break my windows. Pope.
 4. Any thing let out for hire.
A wit can study in the streets;
Not quite so well, however, as one ought;
A backney coach may chance to spoil a thought. Pope.
 5. Much used; common.
These notions young students in physick derive
From their backney authors. Harvey.
- TO HACKNEY. v. a. [from the noun.]
To practise in one thing; to accustom, as to the road.
He is long backney'd in the ways of men. Shak.
- HA'CKQUETON. n. f. [baquet, old French, a little horse.] Some piece of armour.
You may see the very fashion of the Irish horseman in his long hose, riding shoes of costly cordwain, his hackqueton, and his habergeon. Spenser.
- HAD. The preterite and part. pass. of have.
I had better, you had better, &c. means the same as, it would be better for me or you; or it would be more eligible: it is always used potentially, not indicatively: nor is have ever used to that import. We say likewise, it had been better or worse.
I had rather be a country servant maid,
Than a queen with this condition. Shakespeare.
Had we not better leave this Utica,
To arm Numidia in our cause? Addison's Cato.
- HA'DDOCK. n. f. [badet, Fr.] A sea fish of the cod kind, but small.
The coast is plentifully stored with pilchards, herrings, and haddocks. Carew.
- HAFT. n. f. [hæft, Saxon; best, Dutch, from to have or bold.] A handle; that part of any instrument that is taken into the hand.
This brandish'd dagger
I'll bury to the haft in her fair breast. Dryden.
These extremities of the joints are the hasts and handles of the members. Dryden's Dafresnoy.
A needle is a simple body, being only made of itself; but a sword is a compound, because its haft or handle is made of materials different from the blade. Watts.
- TO HAFT. v. a. [from the noun.] To set in a haft. Ainsworth.
- HAG. n. f. [hægerre, a goblin, Saxon; beckle, a witch, Dutch.]
1. A fury; a she-monster.
Thus spoke th' impatient prince, and made a pause:
His foul hags rais'd their heads, and clapt their hands;
And all the powers of hell, in full applause,
Flourish'd their snakes, and tost their flaming brands. Crasbaw.
 2. A witch; an enchantress.
Out of my door, you witch! you bag, you bag- gage, you poulcat, you rusion. Shakespeare.
 3. An old ugly woman.
Such affectations may become the young;
But thou, old bag, of threescore years and three,
Is shewing of thy parts in Greek for thee? Dryden.

H A G

- TO HAG. v. a. [from the noun.] To torment; to harass with vain terror.
That makes them in the dark see visions,
And bag themselves with apparitions. Hudibras.
How are superstitious men bagged out of their wits with the fancy of omens, tales, and visions! L'Estrange.
- HA'GARD. adj. [hagard, French.]
1. Wild; untamed; irreclaimable.
As bagard hawk, presuming to contend
With hardy fowl above his able might,
His weary pounces all in vain doth send,
To trust the prey too heavy for his flight. Fairy Q.
She's too disdainful;
I know her spirits are as coy and wild,
As bagard as the rock. Shakespeare.
 2. [Hager, German.] Lean; rugged; perhaps, ugly. To this sense I have put the following passage; for the author ought to have written bagard.
A bagged carion of a wolf, and a jolly sort of dog,
With good flesh upon's back, fell into company together. L'Estrange.
 3. Deformed with passion; wildly disordered.
Fearful besides of what in fight had pass'd,
His hands and bagard eyes to heav'n he cast. Dryden.
Where are the conscious looks, the face now pale,
Now flushing red, the down-cast bagard eyes,
Or fixt on earth, or slowly rais'd! Smith.
- HAGGARD. n. f.
1. Any thing wild or irreclaimable.
I will be married to a wealthy widow,
Ere three days pass, which has as long lov'd me
As I have lov'd this proud disdainful baggard. Shakespeare.
 2. A species of hawk.
Does the wild baggard tow'r into the sky,
And to the South by thy direction fly? Sandys.
I enlarge my discourse to the observation of the aires, the brancher, the ramith hawk, and the baggard. Walton.
 3. A hag. So Garth has used it for want of understanding it.
Beneath the gloomy covert of an yew,
In a dark grot, the baleful baggard lay,
Breathing black vengeance, and infecting day. Garth.
- HA'GGARDLY. adv. [from baggard.] Deformedly; uglily.
For her the rich Arabia sweats her gum;
And precious oils from distant Indies come,
How baggardly soe'er she looks at home. Dryden.
- HA'GCESS. n. f. [from bog or back.] A mass of meat, generally pork chopped, and inclosed in a membrane. In Scotland it is commonly made in a sheep's maw of the entrails of the same animal, cut small, with suet and spices.
- HA'GGISH. adj. [from bag.] Of the nature of a hag; deformed; horrid.
But on us both did baggyish age steal on,
And wore us out of act. Shakespeare.
- TO HA'GGLE. v. a. [corrupted from hackle or back.] To cut; to chop; to mangle: always in a bad sense.
Suffolk first died, and York all bagged o'er,
Comes to him where in gore he lay inteept'd. Shak.
- TO HA'GGLE. v. n. To be tedious in a bargain; to be long in coming to the price.
- HA'GGLER. n. f. [from baggle.]
1. One that cuts.
 2. One that is tardy in bargaining.
- HA'GIOGRAPHER. n. f. [αγιος and γραφω.] A holy writer.
The Jews divide the Holy Scriptures of the Old Testament into the law, the prophets, and the hagiographers.

H A I

- HAI. Interject. An expression of sudden effort.
Her coats tuck'd up, and all her motions just,
She stamps, and then cries hai! at ev'ry thrust. Dryden.
- HAIL. n. f. [hazel, Saxon.] Drops of rain frozen in their falling.
Thunder mix'd with hail,
Hail mix'd with fire, must rend th' Egyptian sky. Locke.
Milton.
- TO HAIL. v. n. To pour down hail.
My people shall dwell in a peaceable habitation
When it shall hail, coming down on the forest. Is. xxii. 19.
- HAIL. Interject. [hoel, health, Saxon: hail, therefore, is the same as salve of the Latins, or vyvains of the Greeks, health be to you.] A term of salutation now used only in poetry; health be to you. It is used likewise to things inanimate.
Hail, hail, brave friend!
Say to the king the knowledge of the broil. Shak.
Her sick head is bound about with clouds:
It does not look as it would have a hail,
Or health wish'd in it, as on other morns. Ben Jonson.
- The angel hail
Bestow'd, the holy salutation us'd
Long after to blest Mary, second Eve. Milton.
Farewell, happy fields,
Where joy for ever dwells! hail horrors! hail Infernal world! and thou profoundest hell Receive thy new possessor! Milton.
All hail, he cry'd, thy country's grace and love;
Once first of men below, now first of birds above. Dryden.
- Hail* to the sun! from whose returning light
The cheerful soldier's arms new lustre take. Roue.
- TO HAIL. v. a. [from the noun.] To salute; to call to.
A galley drawing near unto the shore, was hailed by a Turk, accompanied with a troop of horsemen. Knoller.
Thrice call upon my name, thrice beat your breast,
And hail me thrice to everlasting rest. Dryden.
- HA'ILSHOT. n. f. [hail and shot.] Small shot scattered like hail.
The master of the artillery did visit them sharply
With murdering hailshot, from the pieces mounted towards the top of the hill. Hayward.
- HA'ILSTONE. n. f. [hail and stone.] A particle or single ball of hail.
You are no surer, no,
Than is the coal of fire upon the ice,
Or hailstone in the sun. Shakespeare.
Hard hailstones lie not thicker on the plain,
Nor shaken oaks such show'rs of acorns rain. Dryden.
- HA'ILY. adj. [from hail.] Consisting of hail.
From whose dark womb a rattling tempest pours,
Which the cold North congeals to haily showers. Pope.
- HAIR. n. f. [hær, Saxon.]
1. One of the common teguments of the body. It is to be found upon all the parts of the body, except the soles of the feet and palms of the hands. When we examine the hairs with a microscope, we find that they have each a round bulbous root, which lies pretty deep in the skin, and which draws their nourishment from the surrounding humours: that each hair consists of five or six others, wrapt up in a common tegument or tube. They grow as the nails do, each part near the root thrusting forward that which is immediately above it, and not by any liquor running along the hair in tubes, as plants grow. Quincy.

My fleece of woolly hair uncurls. Shakespeare.
 Shall the difference of hair only, on the skin, be a mark of a different internal constitution between a changeling and a drill? Locke.

2. A single hair.

Naughty lady,
 These hairs which thou do'st ravish from my chin,
 Will quicken and accuse thee. Shakespeare.

Much is breeding;
 Which, like the courser's hair, hath yet but life,
 And not a serpent's poison. Shakespeare.

3. Any thing proverbially small.

If thou tak'st more
 Or less than just a pound; if the scale turn
 But in the estimation of a hair, Thou die'st. Shakespeare.

He judges to a hair of little indecencies, and knows better than any man what is not to be written.
Dryden.

4. Course; order; grain; the hair falling in a certain direction

He is a curer of souls, and you a curer of bodies:
 if you should fight, you go against the hair of your profession. Shakespeare.

HAIRBRAINED. adj. [This should rather be written barebrained, unconstant, unsettled, wild as a bare.] Wild; irregular; unsteady.

Let's leave this town; for they are hairbrain'd slaves,
 And hunger will enforce them be more eager.
Shakespeare.

HAIRBREADTH. n. f. [hair and breadth.]
 A very small distance; the diameter of a hair.

Seven hundred chosen men left-handed could sling stones at an hairbreadth, and not miss Judg. xx. 16.

I spoke of most disastrous chances,
 Of moving accidents by flood and field;
 Of hairbreadth 'scapes in th' imminent deadly breach. Shakespeare.

HAIRBEL. n. f. The name of a flower;
 the hyacinth.

HAIRCLOTH. n. f. [hair and cloth.] Stuff made of hair, very rough and prickly, worn sometimes in mortification.

It is composed of reeds and parts of plants woven together, like a piece of haircloth. Grew.

HAIRLACE. n. f. [hair and lace.] The fillet with which women tie up their hair.

Some worms are commonly resembled to a woman's hairlace or fillet, thence called tenia.
Harvey.

If Molly happens to be careless,
 And but neglects to warm her hairlace,
 She gets a cold as sure as death. Swift.

HAIRLESS. adj. [from hair.] Wanting
 hair.]

White beards have arm'd their thin and hairless
 scalps

Against thy majesty. Shakespeare.

HAIRINESS. n. f. [from hair.] The state of being covered with hair, or abounding with hair.

HAIRY. adj. [from hair.]

1. Overgrown with hair; covered with hair.

She has hairy temples then had rounded
 With coronet of flowers. Shakespeare.

Children are not hairy, for that their skins are more perspirable. Bacon.

2. Consisting of hair.

Storms have shed
 From vines the hairy honours of their head.
Dryden.

HAKE. n. f. A kind of fish.

The coast is stored with mackerel and bake.
Carriv.

HA'EOT. n. f. [from bake.] A kind of fish. Ainsworth.

HAL, in local names, is derived like al

from the Saxon healle, i. e. a hall, a palace. In Gothick alb signifies a temple, or any other famous building.
Gibf. Camden.

HALBERD. n. f. [balebarde, French; balle-barde, Dutch, from barde, an axe, and bale, a court, halberds being the common weapons of guards.] A battle-axe fixed to a long pole.

Advance thy halberd higher than my breast.
Shakespeare.

Our halberds did shut up his passage. Shakespeare.

Four knaves in garbs succinct, a trusty band
 Caps on their heads, and halberds in their hand, Draw forth to combat on the velvet plain. Pope.

HALBERDIER. n. f. [halberdier, French from halberd.] One who is armed with a halberd.

The dukes appointed him a guard of thirty halberdiers, in a livery of murrey and blue, to attend his person. Bacon.

The king had only his halberdiers, and fewer of them than used to go with him. Clarendon.

HALCYON. n. f. [halcyo, Latin.] A bird, of which it is said that she breeds in the sea, and that there is always a calm during her incubation.

Such smiling rogues, as these, sooth ev'ry passion,
 Bring oil to fire, snow to their colder moods;
 Renege, affirm, and turn their halcyon beaks
 With ev'ry gale and vary of their masters. Shakespeare.

Amidst our arms as quiet you shall be,
 As halcyons brooding on a Winter sea. Dryden.

HALCYON. adj. [from the noun.] Placid;
 quiet; still; peaceful.

When great Augustus made war's tempest cease,
 His halcyon days brought forth the arts of peace.
Denham.

No man can expect eternal serenity and halcyon days from so incompetent and partial a cause, as the constant course of the sun in the equinoctial circle. Bentley.

HALE. adj. [This should rather be written hail, from hæl, health.] Healthy; sound;
 hearty; well complexioned.

My feeble sheep like well below,
 For they been bale enough I trow,
 And liken their abode. Spenser.

Some of these wise partizans concluded the government had hired two or three hundred bale men, to be pinioned, if not executed, as the pretended captives. Addison.

His stomach too begins to fail;
 Last year we thought him strong and bale
 But now he's quite another thing:
 I wish he may hold out 'till Spring. Swift.

TO HALE. v. a. [halen, Dutch; haler, French.] To drag by force; to pull violently and rudely.

Fly to your house;
 The plebeians have got your fellow tribune,
 And bale him up and down. Shakespeare.

My third comfort,
 Starr'd most unluckily, is from my breast,
 Hal'd out to murder. Shakespeare.

Give diligence that thou mayest be delivered from him, lest he bale thee to the judge. Luke.

He by the neck hath hal'd, in pieces cut,
 And set me as a mark on every butt. Sandys.

Thither by happy-footed furies hal'd,
 At certain revolutions, all the damn'd
 Are brought. Milton.

This sinister gravity is drawn that way by the great artery, which then subleth, and baileth the heart unto it. Brown.

Who would not be disgusted with any recreation, in itself indifferent, if he should with blows be baled to it when he had no mind? Locke.

In all the tumults at Rome, though the people proceeded sometimes to pull and bale one another about, yet no blood was drawn 'till the time of the Gracchi. Swift.

HA'LER. n. f. [from bale.] He who pulls and hales.

HALF. n. f. plural halves. [healf, Sax. and all the Teutonic dialects. The l is often not sounded.]

1. A moiety; one part of two; an equal part.

 they go to hell, if they would venture their industry
 the right way. Ben Jonson.

Well chosen friendship, the most noble
 Of virtues all our joys makes double,
 And into halves divides our trouble. Denham.

Or what but riches is there known
 Which man can solely call his own;
 In which no creature goes his half,
 Unless it be to squint and laugh? Hudibras.

No mortal tongue can half the beauty tell;
 For none but hands divine could work so well. Dryden.

Of our manufacture foreign markets took off one half, and the other half were consumed amongst ourselves. Locke.

The council is made up half out of the noble families, and half out of the plebeian. Addison.

Half the misery of life might be extinguished, would men alleviate the general curse by mutual compassion. Addison.

Her beauty in thy softer half
 Bury'd and lost, she ought to grieve. Prior.

Natural was it for a prince, who had proposed to himself the empire of the world, not to neglect the sea, the half of his dominions. Arbutnot.

2. It sometimes has a plural signification when a number is divided.

Had the land selected of the best,
Half had come hence, and let the world provide the rest. Dryden.

HALF. adv.

1. In part; equally.

I go with love and fortune, two blind guides,
 To lead my way; half loth, and half consenting.
Dryden.

2. It is much used in composition to signify a thing imperfect, as the following examples will show.

HALFBLOOD. n. f. One not born of the same father and mother.

Which shall be heir of the two male twins, who,
 by the dissection of the mother, were laid open to the world? Whether a sister by the half-blood shall inherit before a brother's daughter by the whole-blood? Locke.

3. The publick room of a corporation.

With expedition on the beadle call,
To summon all the company to the hall. Garrick.

4. The first large room of a house,

That light we see is burning in my hall.
Courtly is sooner found in lowly sheds
With smoky rafters, than in tap'stry halls
And courts of princes. Milton.

HALLELU'IAH. n. s. [הללו יה] Praise ye the Lord. A song of thanksgiving.

Then shall thy saints
Unsainted Hallelujahs to Thee sing, Hymns of high praise. Milton.

Singing those devout hymns and heavenly anthems, in which the church militant seems ambitious to emulate the triumphant, and echo back the solemn praises and hallelujahs of the celestial choirs. Boyle.

HA'LOO. interj. [The original of this word is controverted: some imagine it corrupted from almi, to him! others from allons, let us go! and Skinner from haller, to draw.] A word of encouragement when dogs are let loose on their game.

Some popular chief,
More noisy than the rest, but cries halloo,
And, in a trice, the bellowing herd comes out. Dryden.

To HA'LLOO. v. n. [haler, French.]

1. To cry as after the dogs.

A cry more tuneable
Was never halloo'd to, nor cheer'd with horn. Shakespeare.

Country folks hallood and houted after me, as the arrantest coward that ever shewed his shoulders to his enemy. Sidney.

To HA'LLOO. v. a.

1. To encourage with shouts.

If, whilst a boy, Jack ran from school,
Fond of his hunting-horn and pole,
Though gout and age his speed detain,
Old John halloos his hounds again. Prior.

2. To chase with shouts.

If I fly, Marcius, Halloo me like a hare. Shakespeare.

3. To call or shout to.

When we have found the king, he that first lights on him,

Halloo the other. Shakespeare. King Lear.
To HA'LLOW. v. a. [halgian, halig, Saxon, holy.]

1. To consecrate; to make holy.

When we sanctify or hallow churches, it is only to testify that we make them places of publick resort; that we invest God himself with them, and that we sever them from common uses. Hooker.

It cannot be endured to hear a man profess that he putteth fire to his neighbour's house, but yet so halloweth the same with prayer, that he hopeth it shall not burn. Hooker.

Is't Cade that I have slain, that monstrous traitor? Sword, I will hallow thee for this thy deed,
And hang thee o'er my tomb, when I am dead. Shakespeare.

My prayers

Are not words duly hallow'd, nor my wishes
More worth than vanities; yet pray'rs and wishes
Are all I can return. Shakespeare. Henry VIII.

God from work

Now resting, blest'd and hallow'd the seventh day,
As resting on that day from all his works,
But not in silence holy kept. Milton.

Then banish'd faith shall once again return,
And vestal fires in hallow'd temples burn. Dryden.

No satyr lurks within this hallow'd ground;
But nymphs and heroines, kings and gods abound. Granville.

2. To reverence as holy; hallowed be thy name.

HALLUCINATION. n. s. [hallucinatio, Lat.]

Error; blunder; mistake; folly.

A wasting of flesh, without cause, is frequently termed a bewitching disease; but questionable a mere hallucination of the vulgar. Harvey.

This must have been the hallucination of the transcriber, who probably mistook the dash of the I for a T. Addison.

HALM. n. s. [healm, Saxon.] Straw; pronounced harum: which see.

HA'LO. n. s. A red circle round the sun or moon.

If the hail be a little flatted, the light transmitted may grow so strong, at a little less distance than that of twenty-six degrees, as to form a halo about the sun or moon; which halo, as often as the hail-stones are duly figured, may be coloured. Newton.

I saw by reflexion, in a vessel of stagnating water, three halo's, crowns or rings of colours about the sun, like three little rainbows, concentrick to his body. Newton.

HA'LSERING. adj. [hals, German; hals, Scottish, the neck.] Sounding harshly; inharmonious in the throat or tongue.

Not in use.

He's fled, my lord, and all his pow'rs do yield;
And humbly thus, with balsters on their necks,
Expect your highness' doom of life or death. Shak.
They were to die by the sword if they stood upon defence, and by the balster if they yielded; wherefore they made choice to die rather as soldiers than as dogs. Hayward.
Were I a drowsy judge, whose dismal note
Disgorgeth balsters, as a juggler's throat
Doth ribbands. Cleveland.
He gets renown, who, to the balster near,
But narrowly escapes, and buys it dear. Dryden.
2. A cord; a strong string.
Whom neither balster binds nor burthens charge.
Sandys.

be contracted from hand panier; but hanaperium appears to have been a word long in use, whence hanaper, hamper.] A large basket for carriage.
What powder'd wigs! what flames and darts!
What hamper full of bleeding hearts! Swift.
- To HA'MPER. v. a. [The original of this word, in its present meaning, is uncertain: Junius observes that hamplins in Teutonic is a quarrel: others imagine that hamper or hanaper, being the treasury to which fines are paid, to hamper,

H A N

- which is commonly applied to the law, means originally to fine.]
1. To shackle; to entangle, as in chains or nets.
O loose this frame, this knot of man untie!
That my free soul may use her wing,
Which is now pinion'd with mortality,
As an entangl'd, hamper'd thing. Herbert.
We shall find such engines to assail,
And hamper thee, as thou shalt come of force. Milt.
What was it but a lion hampered in a net!
L'Estrange.
Wear under vizard-masks their talents,
And mother wits before their gallants;

12. To rest; to reside.

Sleep shall neither night nor day
hang upon his penthouse lid. Shakefp.

13. To be in suspense; to be in a state of uncertainty.

Thy life shall hang in doubt before thee, and thou shalt fear day and night, and shalt have none assurance of thy life. Deut.

14. To be delayed; to linger.

A noble stroke he lifted high,
Which hang not, but so swift with tempest fell
On the proud crest of Satan. Milton.

She thrice essay'd to speak: her accents hang,
And fault'ring dy'd unfinish'd on her tongue. Dryd.

15. To be dependant on.

Oh, how wretched
Is that poor man that hangs on princes' favours! Sh.
Great queen! whose name strikes haughty monarchs pale,
On whose just sceptre hangs Europa's scale. Prior.

16. To be fixed or suspended with attention.

Though wond'ring senators hang on all he spoke,
The club must hail him master of the joke. Pope.

any thing hangs; as, the pot hangers.

H'ANGER. n. f. [from hang.] A short broad sword.

H'ANGER-ON. n. f. [from hang.] A dependant, one who eats and drinks without payment.

If the wife or children were absent, their rooms were supplied by the umbrella, or hangers-on. Brown.

They all excused themselves save two, which two he reckoned his friends, and all the rest hangers-on.
L'Estrange.

He is a perpetual hanger-on, yet nobody knows how to be without him. Swift.

HANGING. n. f. [from hang.]

1. Drapery hung or fastened against the walls of rooms by way of ornament.

Like rich hangings in an homely house
So was his will in his old feeble body. Shakefp.

Being informed that his breakfast was ready, he drew towards the door, where the hangings were held up. Clarendon.

Now purple hangings cloath the palace walls,
And sumptuous seats are made in splendid halls. Dryden.

Lucas Van Leyden has infected all Europe with his designs for tapestry, which, by the ignorant, are called ancient hangings. Dryden.

Rome oft has heard a cross haranguing,
With prompting priest behind the hanging. Prior.

2. Any thing that hangs to another. Not in use.

A storm, or robbery, or call it what you will,
Shook down my mellow hangings, nay my leaves,
And left me bare to weather. Shakefp.

H'ANGING participial adj. [from hang.]

1. Foreboding death by the halter.

Surely, sir, a good favour you have; but that you have a hanging look. Shakefp.

2. Requiring to be punished by the halter;
A hanging matter.

HANGMAN. n. f. [hang and man.]

1. The publick executioner.

This monster sat like a hangman upon a pair of gallows; in his right hand he was painted holding a crown of laurel, and in his left hand a purse of money. Sidney.

Who makes that noise there? who are you?
—Your friend, sir, the hangman: you must be so good, sir, to rise, and be put to death. Shak:sp.

Men do not stand
In so ill case, that God hath with his hand

Sign'd kings blank charters to kill whom they hate;
Nor are they vicars but hangmen to fate. Donner.

I never knew a critick, who made it his business to lash the faults of other writers, that was not guilty of greater himself? as the hangman is generally a worse malefactor than the criminal that suffers by his hand. Addison.

2. A term of reproach, either serious or ludicrous.

One cried, God bless us! and Amen! the other;
As they had seen me with these hangman's hands:
Listening their fear, I could dot say Amen,
When they did say God bless us. Shakefp.

He hath twice or thrice cut Cupid's bowstring, and the little hangman dare not shoot at him. Shak.

HANK. n. f. [bank, Islandick, a chain or coil of rope.]

1. A skein of thread.

2. A tye; a check; an influence. A low
word.

Do we think we have the bank that some gallants have on their trusting merchants, that, upon peril of losing all former scores, he must still go on to supply?
Decay of Piety.

To H'ANKER. v. n. [bankeren, Dutch.] To long importunately; to have an incessant wish; it has commonly after before the thing desired. It is scarcely used but in familiar language.

And now the saints began their reign,
For which th' had yearn'd so long in vain,
And felt such bowel bankerings,
To see an empire all of kings. Hudibras.

Among women and children, care is to be taken that they get not a bankering after these juggling astrologers and fortune-tellers. L'Estrange.

The shepherd would be a merchant, and the merchant bankers after something else. L'Estrange.

Dost thou not banker after a greater liberty in some things? If not, there's no better sign of good resolution. Calamy.

The wife is an old coquette, that is always bankering after the diversions of the town. Addison.

The republick that fell under the subjection of the duke of Florence, still retains many bankerings
after its ancient liberty.

HAN'T, for has not, or have not,

That roguish leer of your's makes a pretty woman's heart ache: you han't that simper about the mouth for nothing. Addison.

HAP. n. f. [anbap, in Welsh, is misfortune.]

1. Chance; fortune.

Whether art it were, or heedless hap,
As through the flow'ring forest rash she fled,
In her rude hairs sweet flowers themselves did lap,
And nourishing fresh leaves and blossoms did enwrap. Spenser.

2. That which happens by chance or fortune.

Curst be good haps, and curst be they that build
Their hopes on haps, and do not make despair
For all these certain blows the surest shield. Sidney.

To have ejected whatsoever that church doth make account of, without any other crime than that it hath been the hap thereof to be used by the church of Rome, and not to be commanded in the word of God, might haply have pleased some few men, who, having begun such a course themselves, must be glad to see their example followed. Hooker.

Things casual do vary, and that which a man doth but chance to think well of cannot still have the like hap. Knolles.

Solyman commended them for their valour in their evil haps, more than the victory of others got by good fortune. Knolles.

A fox had the hap to fall into the hands of a lion.
L'Estrange.

3. Accident; casual event; misfortune.

Nor feared the among the bands to stray
Of armed men; for often had she seen
The tragick end of many a bloody fray:
Her life had full of haps and hazards been. Fairfax.

HAP-HAZARD. n. f. Chance; accident:
perhaps originally hap baxardè.

The former of these is the most sure and infallible way; but so hard that all shun it, and had rather walk

walk as men do in the dark by bap-bazard, than tread so long and intricate mazes for knowledge's sake. Hooker.

We live at bap-bazard, and without any insight into causes and effects. L'Estrange.

We take our principles at bap-bazard upon trust, and then believe a whole system, upon a presumption that they are true. Locke.

TO HAP. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To happen; to have the casual consequence.

It will be too late to gather ships or soldiers, which may need to be presently employed, and whose want may bap to hazard a kingdom. Clarendon.

2. To come by chance; to befall casually.

Run you to the citadel,
And tell my lords and lady what hath bap'd. Shak.
In destructions by deluge the remnant which bap to be reserved are ignorant people. Bacon.

HA'PLY. adv. [from bap.]

1. Perhaps; peradventure; it may be.

This love of theirs myself have often seen,
Haply when they have judg'd me fast asleep. Shak.
To warn

Us, baply too secure, of our discharge
From penalty, because from death releas'd
Some days. Milton.

Then baply yet your breast remains untouch'd,
Though that seems strange. Rowe.

Let us now see what conclusions may be found for instruction of any other state, that may baply labour under the like circumstances. Swift.

2. By chance; by accident.

Leviathan, which God of all his works
Created hugest, that swim the ocean stream;
Him baply slumb'ring on the Norway foam,
The pilot of some small night-founder'd skiff
Deeming some island oft, as seamen tell,
With fixed anchor in his scaly rind,
Moors by his side. Milton.

HA'PLESS. adj. [from bap.] Unhappy; unfortunate; luckless; unlucky.

Hapless Ægeon, whom the fates have mark'd
To bear th' extremity of dire mishap! Shakesp.
Here bapless Icarus had found his part,
Had not the father's grief restrain'd his art. Dryden.
Did his bapless passion equal mine,
I would refuse the bliss. Smith.

TO HA'PPEN. v. n. [from bap.]

1. To fall out; to chance to come to pass.
Bring forth your strong reasons, and shew us what shall bappen. Isaiah.

2. To light; to fall by chance.

I have bappened on some other accounts relating to mortalities. Graunt.

HA'PPILY. adv. [from bappy.]

1. Fortunately; luckily; successfully.

I come to wive it wealthily in Padua:
If wealthily, then bappily in Padua. Shakesp.
Preferr'd by conquest, bappily o'erthrown,
Falling they rise to be with us made one. Waller.
Neither is it so trivial an undertaking to make a tragedy end bappily; for 'tis more difficult to save than kill. Dryden.

2. Addressfully; gracefully; without labour.

Form'd by thy converse, bappily to steer
From grave to gay, from lively to severe. Pope.

3. In a state of felicity; as, he lives bappily.

4. By chance; peradventure. In this sense bappily is written erroneously for baply.

One thing more I shall wish you to desire of them, who bappily may peruse these two treasures. Digby.

HA'PPINESS. n. f. [from bappy.]

1. Felicity; state in which the desires are satisfied.

Happiness is that estate whereby we attain, so far as possibly may be attained, the full possession of that which simply for itself is to be desired and containeth in it after an eminent sort the contentation of our desires, the highest degree of all our perfection. Hooker.

Oh! bappiness of sweet retir'd content,
To be at once secure and innocent. Denham.

Philosophers differ about the chief good or bappiness of man. Temple.

The various and contrary choices that men make in the world, argue that the same thing is not good to every man alike: this variety of pursuits shews, that every one does not place his bappiness in the same thing. Locke.

2. Good luck; good fortune.

3. Fortuitous elegance; unstudied grace.

Certain graces and bappinesses, peculiar to every language, give life and energy to the words. Denham.

Some beauties yet no precepts can declare;
For there's a bappiness as well as care. Pope.

Form'd by some rule that guides but not constrains,
And finish'd more through bappiness than pains. Pope.

HA'PPY. adj. [from bap; as lucky for luck.]

1. In a state of felicity; in a state where the desire is satisfied.

At other end Uran did Strephon lend Her bappy making hand. Sidney.

Am I bappy in thy news?
—If to have done the thing you gave in charge,
Beget your happiness, be bappy then;
For it is done. Shakesp.

Truth and peace, and love, shall ever shine
About the supreme throne

Of him, whose bappy state alone,
Our heav'nly guided soul shall climb. Milton.

Though the presence of imaginary good cannot make us bappy, the absence of it may make us miserable. Addison.

2. Lucky; successful; fortunate.

Chymists have been more bappy in finding experiments than the causes of them. Boyle.

Yet in this agony his fancy wrought,
And fear supply'd him with this bappy thought. Dryden.

Innocence; freedom from tendency to injury or hurt.

When, through tasteless flat humility,
In dough-bak'd men some harmlessness we see,
'Tis but his phlegm that's virtuous, and not he. Donne.

Compare the harmlessness, the credulity, the tenderness, the modesty, and the ingenuous pliability to virtuous counsels, which is in youth untainted, with the mischievousness, the slyness, the craft, the impudence, the falshood, and the confirmed obstinacy in an aged long-practised sinner. South.

HARMONICAL. } adj. [armonia; harmo-

HA'RMONICK. } nique, French.]

for all harmonical use, one half note to be interposed.
Bacon.

2. Concordant; musical; proportioned to each other: less properly.

Harmonical sounds, and discordant sounds, are both active and positive; but blackness and darkness are, indeed, but privatives. Bacon.

So swells each wind-pipe; as intones to as,
Harmonick twang of leather, horn, and brass. Pope.

HARMONIOUS. adj. [harmonieux, Fr. from harmony.]

1. Adapted to each other; having the parts proportioned to each other; symmetrical.

All the wide-extended sky,
And all the harmonious worlds on high,
And Virgil's sacred work shall dye. Cowley.

God has made the intellectual world harmonious and beautiful without us; but it will never come into our heads all at once; we must bring it home piece-meal. Locke.

2. Having sounds concordant to each other;
musical; symphonious.

Thoughts that voluntary move Harmonious numbers. Milton.

The verse of Chaucer is not harmonious to us;
they who lived with him, thought it musical. Dryden.

HARMONIOUSLY. adv. [from harmonious.]

1. With just adaptation and proportion of parts to each other.

Not chaos-like, together crush'd and bruis'd;
But as the world, harmoniously confus'd:
Where order in variety we see,
And where, though all things differ, they agree. Pope.

That all these distances, motions, and quantities of matter should be so accurately and harmoniously adjusted in this great variety of our system, is above
the

H A R

the fortuitous hits of blind material causes, and must certainly flow from that eternal fountain of wisdom.
Bentley.

2. Musically; with concord of sounds.

If we look upon the world as a musical instrument, well-tuned: and by struck, we ought not to worship the instrument; but him that makes the musick.
Stillington.

Romansq; lyrā plaudat tibi; Barbarus harpā.
Ven. Fort.]

1. A lyre; an instrument strung with wire and commonly struck with the finger.

Arion, when through tempests cruel wreck
He forth was thrown into the greedy seas,
Through the sweet musick which his harp did make,
Allur'd a dolphin him from death to ease.
Spenser.

They touch'd their golden harps, and hymning
prais'd
God and his works.
Milton.

Nor wanted tuneful harp, nor vocal quire;
The muses sung, Apollo touch'd the lyre.
Dryden.

2. A constellation.

Next shines the harp, and through the liquid skies
The shell as lightest, first begins to rise;
Thus when sweet Orpheus struck to list'ning rocks
He senses gave, and ears to wither'd oaks.
Creech.

TO HARP. v. n. [harper, French from the noun.]

1. To play on the harp.

I heard the voice of harpers harping with their harps.
Rev.
Things without life giving sound, whether pipe or harp, except they give a distinction in the sounds, how shall it be known what is piped or harped?
1 Cor.

The helmed cherubim,
And sworded seraphim,
Are seen in glitt'ring ranks with wings display'd,
Harping in loud and solemn quire,
With unexpressive notes to heav'n's new-born heir.
Milton.

2. To touch any passion, as the harper touches a string; to dwell on a subject.

You harp a little too much upon one string.
Calder.
Gracious duke,
Harp not on that, nor do not banish reason
For inequality; but let your reason serve
To make the truth appear. Shak. Meas. for Meas.
For thy good caution, thanks:
Thou'lt harp d my fear aright. Shakespeare. Macbeth.
He seems
Proud and disdainful, harping on what I am,
Not what he knew I was. Shakespeare. Ant. and Cleop.

HAR'PER. n. f. [from harp.] A player on the harp.

Never will I trust to speeches penn'd,
Nor to the motion of a schoolboy's tongue;
Nor woo in rhyme, like a blind harper's song. Shak.
I'm the god of the harp: stop, my fairest:—in vain;
Nor the harp, nor the harper, could fetch her again.
Tickell.

HAR'PING Iron. n. f. [from harpago, Latin.]

A bearded dart with a line fastened to the handle, with which whales are struck and caught.

The boat which on the first assault did go,
Struck with a harping iron the younger foe;
Who, when he felt his side so rudely goar'd,
Loud as the sea that nourish'd him he roar'd. Waller.

HAR'PONE'ER. n. f. [harponneur, Fr. from harpoon.] He that throws the harpoon in whale fishing.

Knolles.

HARRIDA'N. n. f. [corrupted from haridelle, a worn-out worthless horse.] A decayed strumpet.

She just endur'd the Winter she began,
And in four months a batter'd harridan;
Now nothing's left, but wither'd, pale, and shrunk,
To bawd for others, and go shares with punk. Swift.

HAR'ROW. n. f. [charroue, French; harcke, German, a rake.] A frame of timbers crossing each other, and set with teeth, drawn over sowed ground to break the clods, and throw the earth over the seed.

The land with daily care
Is exercis'd, and with an iron war
Of rakes and harrows.
Dryden.

Two small harrows, that clap on each side of the ridge, harrow it right up and down.
Mortimer.

TO HAR'ROW. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To cover with earth by the harrow.

Friend, harrow in time, by some manner of means,
Not only thy peason, but also thy beans. Tusser.

2. To break with the harrow.

Can't thou bind the unicorn with his bond in the furrow? or will he harrow the valleys after thee?
Job.

Let the Volscians
Plow Rome and harrow Italy. Shakespeare.

3. To tear up; to rip up.

I could a tale unfold, whose lightest word
Would harrow up thy soul, freeze thy young blood,
Make thy two eyes, like stars, start from their spheres.
Shakespeare.

Imagine you behold me bound and scourg'd,
My aged muscles harrow'd up with whips;
Or hear me groaning on the rending rack. Rowe.

4. To pillage; to strip; to lay waste. See HARRY, which in Scottish is the same thing.

As the king did excel in good commonwealth laws, so he had in secret a design to make use of them, as well for collecting of treasure as for correcting of manners; and so meaning thereby to harrow his people, did accumulate them the rather.
Bacon.

5. To invade; to harass with incursions. [From perxian, Saxon.] Obsolete.

And he that harrow'd hell with heavy stowre,
The faulty souls from thence brought to his heavenly bowre.
Fairy Queen.

Most glorious Lord of life, that on this day
Did'st make thy triumph over death and sin;
And having harrow'd hell, did'st bring away
Captivity thence captive, us to win. Spenser.

5. To disturb; to put into commotion. [This should rather be written harry, harer, French.]

Most like: it harrows me with fear and wonder.
Shakespeare.
Amaz'd I stood, harrow'd with grief and care.
Milton.

HAR'ROW. interj. An exclamation of sudden distress. Now out of use.

Harrow now out and weal away, he cried;
What dismal day hath sent this cursed light,
To see my lord so deadly damnify'd.
Spenser.

HARROWER.

H A R

HARROWER. n. f. [from barrow.]

1. He who harrows.
2. A kind of hawk. Ainsworth.

TO HARRY. v. a. [harer, French.]

1. To tease; to hare; to ruffle.
Thou must not take my former sharpness ill.
I repent me much
That I so harry'd him. Shakefp.
2. In Scotland it signifies to rob, plunder, or oppress: as, one harried a nest; that is, he took the young away: as also, he harried me out of house and home; that is he robbed me of my goods and turned me out of doors. See TO HARROW.

HARSH. adj. [beruifche, German, Skinner.]

1. Austere; roughly four.
Our nature here is not unlike our wine;
Some sorts, when old, continue brisk and fine:
So age's gravity may seem severe,
But nothing barfb or bitter ought t'appear. Denham.
Sweet, bitter, sour, barfb and salt, are all the epithets we have to denominate that numberless variety of relishes. Locke.
The same defect of heat which gives a fierceness to our natures, may contribute to that roughness of of language, which bears some analogy to the barfb fruit of colder countries. Swift.

2. Rough to the ear.
A name unmusical to Volscian ears,
And barfb in sound to thine. Shakefp.
Age might, what nature never gives the young,
Have taught the smoothness of thy native tongue;
But satire needs not that, and wit will shine
Through the barfb cadence of a rugged line. Dryd.
The unnecessary consonants made their spelling tedious, and their pronunciation barfb. Dryden.
Thy lord commands thee now
With a barfb voice, and supercilious brow,
To servile duties. Dryden.

3. Crabbed; morose; peevish.
He was a wise man and an eloquent; but in his nature barfb and haughty. Bacon.
Bear patiently the barfb words of thy enemies, as knowing that the anger of an enemy admonishes us of our duty. Taylor.
No barfb reflection let remembrance raise;
Forbear to mention what thou can'st not praise. Prior.
A certain quickness of apprehension inclined him to kindle into the first motions of anger; but for a long time before he died, no one heard an intemperate or barfb word proceed from him. Atterbury.
4. Rugged to the touch; rough.
Black feels as if you were feeling needles points, or some barfb sand; and red feels very smooth. Boyle.
5. Unpleasing; rigorous.
With eloquence innate his tongue was arm'd;
Though barfb the precept, yet the preacher charm'd. Dryden.

HARSHLY. adv. [from barfb.]

1. Sourly; austere to the palate, as unripe fruit.
2. With violence; in opposition to gentleness, unless in the following passage it rather signifies unripely.
'Till like ripe fruit, thou drop Into thy mother's lap; or be with ease
Gather'd, not barfbly pluck'd. Milton.
3. Severely; morosely; crabbedly.
I would rather he was a man of a rough temper, that would treat me barfbly, than of an effeminate nature. Addison.
4. Unpleasantly to the ear.
My wife is in a wayward mood to-day;
I tell you, 'twould sound barfbly in her ears. Shak.
Get from him why he puts on this confusion,
Grating so barfbly all his days of quiet
With turbulent and dang'rous lunacy. Shakefp.
The rings of iron that on the doors were hung,
Sent out a jarring sound, and barfbly rung. Dryd.

HARSHNESS. n. f. [from barfb.]

1. Sourness; austere taste.
Take an apple and roll it upon a table hard: the rolling doth soften and sweeten the fruit, which is nothing but the smooth distribution of the spirits into the parts; for the unequal distribution of the spirits maketh the barfbness. Bacon.

2. Roughness to the ear.
Neither can the natural barfbness of the French, or the perpetual ill accent, be ever refined into perfect harmony like the Italian. Dryden.
Cannot I admire the height of Milton's invention, and the strength of his expression, without defending his antiquated words, and the perpetual barfbness of their sound? Dryden.
'Tis not enough no barfbness gives offence;
The sound must seem an echo to the sense. Pope.
3. Ruggedness to the touch.
Barfbness and ruggedness of bodies is unpleasant to the touch. Bacon.
4. Crabbedness; moroseness; peevishness.
Thy tender-hefted nature shall not give Thee o'er to barfbness: her eyes are fierce, but thine
Do comfort and not burn. Shakefp.

HART. n. f. [heort, Saxon.] A he-deer;

- the male of the roe.
That instant was I turn'd into a hart,
And my desires, like fell and cruel hounds,
E'er since pursue me. Shakefp.
The deer
And fearful harts do wander every where Amidst the dogs. May's Virgil.
- HARTSHORN. n. f.
Hartshorn is a drug that comes into use many ways, and under many forms. What is used here are the whole horns of the common male deer, which fall off every year. This species is the fallow deer; but some tell us, that the medicinal hartshorn should be that of the true hart or stag. The salt of hartshorn is a great sudorifick, and the spirit has all the virtues of volatile alkalies: it is used to bring people out of fainting by its pungency, holding it under the nose, and pouring down some drops of it in water. Hill.
Ramosc concretions of the volatile salts are observable upon the glass of the receiver, whilst the spirits of vipers and hartshorn are drawn. Woodward.

HARTSHORN. n. f. An herb. Ainsworth.

HART-ROYAL. n. f. A plant. A species of buckthorn-plaintain.

HARTSTONGUE. n. f. [linguacervina, Lat.] A plant.

It commonly grows out from the joints of old walls and buildings, where they are moist and shady. There are very few of them in Europe. Miller.
Hartstongue is propagated by parting the roots, and also by seed. Mortimer.

HARTWORT. n. f. [tordylium, Latin.] An umbelliferous plant. Miller.

HARVEST. n. f. [hærperz, Saxon.]

1. The season of reaping and gathering the corn.
As it ebbs, the seedman
Upon the slime and ooze scatters his grain,
And shortly comes to harvest. Shakefp.
With harvest work he is worse than in Spring. I. Esfrange.
 2. The corn ripened, gathered and inned.
From Ireland come I with my strength,
And reap the harvest which that rascal sow'd. Shak.
When the father is too fondly kind,
Such seed he sows, such harvest shall be hind. Dryd.
 3. The product of labour.
Let us the harvest of our labour eat;
'Tis labour makes the coarsest diet sweet. Dryden.
- HARVEST-HOME. n. f.
1. The song which the reapers sing at the feast made for having inned the harvest.
Your hay it is mow'd, and your corn is reap'd;
Your barns will be full, and your hovels heap'd;
Come, my boys, come,
Come, my boys, come,
And merrily roar out harvest-home. Dryden.
 2. The time of gathering harvest.
At harvest-home, and on the shearing-day,
When he should thanks to Pan and Pales pay. Dryd.
 3. The opportunity of gathering treasure.

H A S

His wife I will use as the key of the cuckold's rogue's coffer; and there's my harvest-home. Shakefp. Merry Wives of Windsor.

HARVEST-LORD. n. f. The head reaper at the harvest.

Grant harvest-lord more by a penny or two,
To call on his fellows the better to do. Tusser.

HARVESTER. n. f. [from harvest.] One who works at the harvest.

HARVESTMAN. n. f. [harvest and man.] A labourer in harvest.

Like to a harvest-man that's talk'd to mow
Or all, or lose his hire. Shakefp.

TO HASH. v. n. [hacher, French.] To mince; to chop into small pieces and mingle.

He rais'd his arm
Above his head, and rain'd a storm
Of blows so terrible and thick
As if he meant to hash her quick. Hudibras.

What have they to complain of but too great variety, though some of the dishes be not served in the exactest order, and politeness; but hashed up in haste? Garrick.

HASK. n. f. This seems to signify a case or habitation made of rushes or flags. Obsolete.

Phæbus, weary of his yearly task,
Established bath his steeds in lowly lay,
And taken up his inn in fishes hask. Spenser.

HASLET. n. f. [hasla, Llandick, a bundle; haslet, haslerel, haslereau, hasler. French.] The heart, liver, and lights of a hog, with the windpipe, and part of the throat to it.

HASP. n. f. [happ, Saxon, whence in some provinces it is yet called hapse.] A clasp folded over a staple, and fastened on with a padlock.

Have doors to open and shut at pleasure, with hasps to them. Mortimer.

TO HASP. v. n. [from the noun.] To shut with a hasp.

HAS SOCK. n. f. [hasock, German.] Skinner.

1. A thick mat on which men kneel at church.
He found his parishioners very irregular; and in order to make them kneel, and join in responses, he gave every one of them a hassock and common prayer book. Addison.
2. In Scotland it is applied to any thing made of rushes or privet, on which a person may sit: it is therefore probable that hassock and hask are the same.

HAST. The second person singular of have.

HASTE. n. f. [haste, French; haste, Dutch.]

1. Hurry; speed; nimbleness; precipitation.
Spare him death!
But O, thou wilt not, can'st not spare!
Haste hath never time to hear. Crashaw.
Our lines reform'd, and not compos'd in haste,
Polish'd like marble, would like marble last;
But as the present, so the last age wait;
In both we find like negligence and wit. Walier.
In as much haste as I am, I cannot forbear giving an example. Dryden.
The wretched father running to their aid
With pious haste, but vain, they next invade. Dryd.
 2. Passion; vehemence.
I said in my haste all men are liars. Psalms.
- TO HASTE. v. n. [haster, French; hasten, Dutch.]
1. To make haste; to be in a hurry; to be busy; to be speedy.
I have not hastened from being a pastor to follow thee. Jer.
 2. To move with swiftness; cagerness; or hurry.
'Tis

'Tis Cinna, I do know him by his gait;
He is a friend. Cinna, where baste you so? Shak.
They were troubled and basted away. Psalms.
All those things are passed away like a shadow,
and as a post that basted by. Wisdom.

Hasting to pay his tribute to the sea,
Like mortal life to meet eternity. Denham.

These rites perform'd, the prince without delay,
Haster to the nether world, his destin'd way. Dryd.

To distant Sparta, and the spacious waste
Of sandy Pyle, the royal youth shall baste. Pope.

Soon as the sun awakes, the sprightly court
Leave their repose, and basten to the sport. Prior.

To HASTE. } v. a. To push forward; to
To HA'STEN. } urge on; to precipitate;
to drive a swifter pace.

Let it be so basted, that supper be ready at the farthest by five of the clock. Shakespeare.

All hopes of succour from your arms are past;
To save us now you must our ruin baste. Dryden.

Each sees his lamp with diff'rent lustre crown'd;
Each knows his course with diff'rent periods bound;
And in his passage through the liquid space,
Nor bastens, nor retards his neighbour's race. Prior.

HA'STENER. n. s. [from basten.] One that hastens or hurries.

HASTILY. adv. [from basty.]

1. In a hurry; speedily; nimbly; quickly.

A voice that called loud and clear,
Come hither, hither, O come bastily! Spenser.

If your grace incline that we should live,
You must not Sir, too bastily forgive. Waller.

The next to danger, hot pursu'd by fate,
Half cloth'd, half naked, bastily retire. Dryden.

2. Rashly; precipitately.

Without considering consequences, we bastily engaged in a war which hath cost us sixty millions. Swift.

3. Passionately; with vehemence.

HA'STINESS. n. s. [from basty.]

1. Haste; speed.

2. Hurry; precipitation.

A fellow being out of breath, or seeming to be for haste, with humble bastiness told Basilus. Sidney.

3. Rash eagerness.

The turns of his verse, his breakings, his propriety, his numbers, and his gravity, I have as far imitated as the poverty of our language, and the bastiness of my performance, would allow. Dryden.

There is most just cause to fear, lest our bastiness to embrace a thing of so perilous consequence, should cause posterity to feel those evils. Hooker.

4. Angry testiness; passionate vehemence.

HA'STINGS. n. s. [from basty.] Peas that come early.

The large white and green bastings are not to be set till the cold is over. Mortimer.

HA'STY. adj. [bastif, Fr. from baste; bastig,
Dutch.]

1. Quick; speedy.

Is the counsel that we two have shar'd,
The sisters vows, the hours that we have spent,
When we have chid the basty footed time
For parting us! Shakespeare.

2. Passionate; vehement.

He that is slow to wrath is of great understanding, but he that is basty of spirit exalteth folly. Proverbs.

3. Rash; precipitate.

See'st thou a man that is basty in his words?
There is more hope of a fool than of him. Proverbs.
Be not rash with thy mouth, and let not thine heart be basty to utter any thing before God. Ecl. v. 2.

4. Early ripe.

Beauty shall be a fading flower, and as the basty fruit before the summer. Isaiah.

HASTY-PUDDING. n. s. A pudding made of milk and flower, boiled quick together; as also of oatmeal and water boiled together.

Sure basty-pudding is thy chiefest dish,
With bullock's liver, or some stinking fish. Dorset.

VOL. L

HAT. n. s. [hæt, Saxon; hatt, German.]

A cover for the head.

She's as big as he is; and there's her thrum hat,
and her muffler too. Shakespeare.

Out of mere ambition you have made
Your holy hat be stamped on the king's coin. Shak.

His hat was like a helmet, or Spanish montero. Baron.

Hermes o'er his head in air appear'd,
And with soft words his drooping spirits cheer'd;
His hat adorn'd with wings disclos'd the god,
And in his hand he bore the sleep-compelling rod. Dryden.

HATBAND. n. s. [hat and band.] A string tied round the hat.

They had hats of blue velvet, with fine plumes of divers colours, set round like hatbands. Baron.

Room for the noble gladiator! see
His coat and hatband shew his quality. Dryden.

HATCASE. n. s. [hat and case.] A slight box for a hat.

I might mention a hatcase, which I would not exchange for all the beavers in Great Britain. Addison.

To HATCH. v. a. [becken, German, as Skinner thinks, from beghen, eghen æg, egg, Saxon.]

1. To produce young from eggs by the warmth of incubation.

He kindly spreads his spacious wing,
And hatches plenty for th' ensuing Spring. Denham.

The tepid caves, and fens and shores,
Their brood as numerous batch from th' eggs, that soon

Bursting with kindly rapture, forth disclo.'d
Their callow young. Milton.

2. To quicken the egg by incubation.

When they have laid such a number of eggs as they can conveniently cover and batch, they give over and begin to sit. Ray.

Others batch their eggs, and tend the birth, 'till it is able to shift for itself. Addison.

3. To produce by precedent action.

Which thing they very well know, and, I doubt not, will easily confess, who live to their great both toil and grief, where the blasphemies of Ariens are renewed by them; who, to batch their heresy, have chosen those churches as fittest nests, where Athanasius's creed is not heard. Hooker.

4. To form by meditation; to contrive.

He was a man harmless and faithful, and one who never batched any hopes prejudicial to the king, but always intended his safety and honour. Hayward.

5. [From hatcher, to cut.] To shade by lines in drawing or graving.

Who first shall wound, through others arms, his blood appearing fresh,

Shall win his sword, silver'd and batebt. Chapman.

Such as Agamemnon and the hand of Greece
Should hold up high in brass; and such again

As venerable Nestor, batch'd in silver,
Should with a band of air, strong as the axle-tree

On which heav'n rides, knit all the Grecian cars
To his experienced tongue. Shakespeare.

Those tender hairs, and those batching strokes of the pencil, which make a kind of minced meat in painting, are never able to deceive the sight. Dryden.

To HATCH. v. n.

1. To be in a state of growing quick.

He observed circumstances in eggs, whilst they were batching, which varied. Boyle.

2. To be in a state of advance towards effect.

HATCH. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A brood excluded from the egg.

2. The act of exclusion from the egg.

3. Disclosure; discovery.

Something's in his soul,
O'er which his melancholy sits on brood;
And, I do doubt, the batch and the disclose
Will be some danger. Shakespeare. Hamlet.

4. [Hæta, Saxon; hecke, Dutch, a bolt.] A half door; a door with opening over it:

perhaps from hacher, to cut, as a batch is part of a door cut in two.

Something about, a little from the right,
In at the window, or else o'er the batch. Shakespeare.

5. [In the plural.] The doors or openings by which they descend from one deck or floor of a ship to another.

To the king's ship, invisible as thou art,
There shalt thou find the mariners asleep
Under the batches. Shakespeare. Tempest.

There she's hid;
The mariners all under batches stow'd. Shakespeare.

So seas, impelled by winds with added pow'r,
Assault the sides and o'er the batches tow'r. Dryd.

A ship was fasten'd to the shore;
The plank was ready laid for safe ascent,
For shelter there the trembling shadow bent,
And skipp'd and skulk'd, and under batches went. Dryden.

6. To be under HATCHES. To be in a state of ignominy, poverty, or depression.

He assures us how this fatherhood continued its course, 'till the captivity in Egypt, and then the poor fatherhood was under batch. Locke.

7. Hatches. Floodgates. Ainsworth.

To HATCHEL. v. a. [hachelen, German.]
To beat flax so as to separate the fibrous from the brittle part.

The asbestos mentioned by Kircher, in his description of China, put into water, moulders like clay, and is a fibrous small excrescence, like hairs growing upon the stones; and for the batchelling, spinning, and weaving it, he refers to his mundus sub- terganeus. Woodward.

HA'TCHEL. n. s. [from the verb; hachel, German.] The instrument with which flax is beaten.

HA'TCHELLER. n. s. [from hachel.] A beater of flax.

HA'TCHET. n. s. [hache, hachette, French;
ascia, Latin.] A small axe.

The batchet is to hew the irregularities of stuff. Moxon.

His harmless batchet he hent in his hand,
And to the field he speedeth. Spenser.

Ye shall have a hempen caudle then, and the help of a batchet. Shakespeare. Henry VI.

Nails, hammers, batchets sharp, and halters strong. Crawshaw.

Tyrneus, the foster-father of the beast,
Then clinched a batchet in his horny fist. Dryden.

Our countryman presented him with a curious batchet, and asking him whether it had a good edge, tried it upon the donor. Addison.

HA'TCHET-FACE. n. s. An ugly face; such, I suppose, as might be hewn out of a block by a hatchet.

An ape his own dear image will embrace:
An ugly beau adores a batchet-face. Dryden.

HA'TCHMENT. n. s. [Corrupted from atchievement. See ATCHIEVEMENT.] Ar-morial escutcheon placed over a door at a funeral.

His means of death, his obscure funeral;
No trophy, sword, nor batchment o'er his bones,
No noble rites nor formal ostentation,
Cry to be heard. Shakespeare.

HATCHWAY. n. s. [hatches and way.] The way over or through the hatches.

To HATE. v. a. [hadian, Saxon.] To detest; to abhor; to abominate; to regard with the passion contrary to love.

You are, I think, assur'd I love you not —Your majesty hath no just cause to bate me. Shak.

Do all men kill the thing they do not love?
—Hates any man the thing he would not kill?
Every offence is not a hate at first. Shakespeare.

Those old inhabitants of thy holy land thou bat- st for doing most odious works. Wisd. xii. 4.

But whatsoever our jarring fortunes prove,
Though our lords bat, methinks we two may love. Dryden.

HATE.

H A T

HATE. n. f. [abe, Saxon.] Malignity; detestation; the contrary to love.

Speak then to me, who neither beg nor fear
Your favours nor your bate. Shakespeare.
Hate to Mezentius, arm'd five hundred more.

Dryden.

Nausicaa teaches that the afflicted are not always the objects of divine bate. Brome's Notes on the Odyssey.

HATEFUL. adj. [bate and full.]

1. That which causes abhorrence; odious; abominable; detestable.

My name's Macbeth.

—The devil himself could not pronounce a title
More bateful to mine ear. Shakespeare.

There is no vice more bateful to God and man than ingratitude. Peacham.

What owe I to his commands

Who hates me, and hath hither thrust me down,
To sit in bateful office here confin'd,
Inhabitant of heav'n and heavenly born? Milton.

I hear the tread

Of bateful steps; I must be viewless now. Milton.

But Umbriel, bateful gnome! forbears not so;

He breaks the phial whence the sorrows flow. Pope.

2. That which feels abhorrence; abhorrent; detesting; malignant; malevolent.

Palamon, compell'd

No more to try the fortune of the field;
And, worse than death, to view with bateful eyes
His rival's conquest. Dryden.

HATEFULLY. adv. [from bateful.]

1. Odiously; abominably.

1. Malignantly; maliciously.

All their hearts stood batefully appall'd Long since. Chapman.

They shall deal with thee batefully, take away all thy labour, and leave thee naked and bare.

Ezek. xxiii. 29.

HATEFULNESS. n. f. [from bateful.] Odiousness.

HATER. n. f. [from bate.] One that hates; an abhorrer; a detester.

I of her understood of that most noble constancy, which whosoever loves not, shews himself to be a bater of virtue, and unworthy to live in the society of mankind. Sidney.

Whilst he stood up and spoke,

He was my master, and I wore my life
To spend upon his baters. Shakespeare.

An enemy to God, and a bater of all good. Brown.

They never wanted so much knowledge as to inform and convince them of the unlawfulness of a man's being a murderer, an bater of God, and a covenant-breaker. South.

HATRED. n. f. [from bate.] Hate; ill-will; malignity; malevolence; dislike; abhorrence; detestation; abomination; the passion contrary to love.

Hatred is the thought of the pain which any thing present or absent is apt to produce in us. Locke.

I wish I had a cause to seek him there,

To oppose his hatred fully. Shakef.

Hatred is the passion of defiance, and there is a kind of aversion and hostility included in its very essence; but then, if there could have been hatred in the world when there was scarce any thing odious, it would have acted within the compass of its proper object. South.

Hatreds are often begotten from slight and almost innocent occasions, and quarrels propagated in the world. Locke.

Retain no malice nor hatred against any: be ready to do them all the kindness you are able. Wake.

She is a Presbyterian of the most rank and virulent kind, and consequently has an inveterate hatred to the church. Swift.

Hatred has in it the guilt of murder, and lull the guilt of adultery. Sherlock.

TO HATTER. v. a. [Perhaps corrupted from batter.] To harass; to weary; to wear out with fatigue.

He's batter'd out with penance. Dryden.

HATTER. n. f. [from hat.] A maker of hats.

H A V

A batter sells a dozen of hats for five shillings a-piece. Swift.

HATTOCK. n. f. [attock, Erse.] A shock of corn. Di.

HAU'BERK. n. f. [hauberg, old French.] A coat of mail; a breast-plate.

Him on the hauberk struck the prince's fore,

That quite disjointed all the linked frame,

And pierced to the skin. Fairy Queen.

Hauberts and helms are hew'd with many a wound;

The mighty maces with such haste descend,

They break the bones, and make the solid armour bend. Dryden.

TO HAVE. v. a. in the present I have, thou hast, he hath: we, ye, they have;
pret. and part. pass. had. [haban, Go-thick; habban. Saxon; hebben, Dutch; avoir, French; avere, Italian.]

1. Not to be without.

I have brought him before you, that after examination had, I might have something to write.

Acts, xiv. 26.

2. To carry; to wear.

Upon the mast they saw a young man, who sat as on horseback having nothing upon him. Sidney.

3. To make use of.

I have no Levite to my priest. Judge.

4. To possess.

He that gathered much had nothing over, and he that gathered little had no lack. Exod. xvi. 18.

5. To obtain; to enjoy; to possess.

Now, O Father, glorify me with thine own self, with the glory which I had with thee before the world was. John, xvii. 5.

6. To take; to receive.

A secret happiness in Petronius is called curiosa felicitas, and which I suppose he had from the feliciter audere of Horace. Dryden.

7. To be in any state; to be attended with or united to as accident or concomitant.

Have I need of madmen, that ye have brought this fellow? 1 Sam. xxi. 15.

8. To put; to take.

That done, go and cart it, and have it away. Tusser.

9. To procure; to find.

I would have any one name to me that tongue, that one can speak as he should do, by the rules of grammar. Locke.

10. Not to neglect; not to omit.

I cannot speak; if my heart be not ready to burst!
Well, sweet Jack, have a care of thyself. Shakef.

Your plea is good; but still I say beware:

Laws are explain'd by men, so have a care. Pope.

11. To hold; to regard.

Of the maid servants shall I be had in honour.

2 Sam.

The proud have had me greatly in derision. Psalms.

12. To maintain; to hold opinion.

Sometimes they will have them to be natural heat, whereas some of them are crude and cold; and sometimes they will have them to be the qualities of tangible parts, whereas they are things by themselves.

Bacon.

13. To contain.

You have of these pedlars that have more in 'em than you'd think, Sister. Shakef.

I will never trust a man again for keeping his sword clean; nor believe he can have every thing in him by wearing his apparel neatly. Shakef.

14. To require; to claim.

What would these madmen have?
First they would bribe us without pence,
Deceive us without common sense,
And without pow'r enslave. Dryden.

15. To be a husband or wife to another.

If I had been married to him, for all he was in women's apparel, I would not have had him. Shak.

16. To be engaged, as in a task or employment.

If we maintain things that are established, we have to strive with a number of heavy prejudices, deeply rooted in the hearts of men. Hooker.

H A V

The Spaniard's captain never hath to meddle with his soldiers pay. Spenser on Ireland.

Of the evils which hindered the peace and good ordering of that land, the inconvenience of the laws was the first which you had in hand. Spenser.

Kings have to deal with their neighbours, their wives, their children, their prelates or clergy, their nobles, their merchants, and their commons. Bacon.

17. To wish; to desire; in a lax sense.

I had rather to be a door-keeper in the house of my God, than to dwell in the tents of wickedness. Psalms.

I would have no man discouraged with that kind of life or series of actions, in which the choice of others, or his own necessities, may have engaged him.

Addison.

18. To buy.

If these trifles were rated only by art and artfulness,
we should have them much cheaper.

19. It is most used in English, as in other European languages, as an auxiliary verb to make the tenses; have, hast, and hath, or has, the preterperfect; and had, and hadst, the preterpluperfect.

If there had been words enow between them to have expressed provocation, they had gone together by the ears. Congreve.

I have heard one of the greatest geniuses this age has produced, who had been trained up in all the polite studies of antiquity, assure me, upon his being obliged to search into records, that he at last took an incredible pleasure in it. Addison.

I have not here considered custom as it makes things easy, but as it renders them delightful; and though others have made the same reflections, it is possible they may not have drawn those uses from it.

Addison.

That admirable precept which Pythagoras is said to have given to his disciples, and which that philosopher must have drawn from the observation I have enlarged upon. Addison.

The gods have placed labour before virtue. Addis.

This observation we have made on man. Addis.

Evil spirits have contracted in the body habits of lust and sensuality, malice, and revenge. Addison.

Their torments have already taken root in them.

Addison.

That excellent author has shewn how every particular custom and habit of virtue will, in its own nature, produce the heaven, or a state of happiness, in him who shall hereafter practice it. Addison.

20. HAVE at, or with, is an expression denoting resolution to make some attempt.
They seem to be imperative expressions;
have this at you; let this reach you, or take this; have with you; take this with you; but this will not explain have at it, or have at him, which must be considered as mere elliptical; as, we will have a trial at it,
or at him.

He that will caper with me for a thousand marks,
let him lend me the money and have at him. Shak.

I can bear my part; 'tis my occupation: have at
it with you. Shakef.

I never was out at a mad frolick, though this is the maddest I ever undertook: have with you, lady mine; I take you at your word. Dryden.

HAVEN. n. f. [haven, Dutch; havre,
French.]

1. A port; a harbour; a station for ships.

Love was threatened and promised to him, and his cousin, as both the tempest and haven of their best years. Sidney.

Order for sea is given:

They have put forth the haven. Shakespeare.

After an hour and a half sailing, we entered into a good haven, being the port of a fair city. Bacon.

The queen beheld, as soon as day appear'd,

The navy under sail, the haven clear'd. Denham.

We may be shipwreck'd by her breath:

Love, favour'd once with that sweet gale,

Doubles his haste, and fills his sail,

'Till he arrive, where the must prove

The haven, or the rock of love. Waller.

2. A shelter; an asylum.

All places, that the eye of heaven visits,
Are to a wife man ports and happy havens. Shakesp.
HA'VENER. n. f. [from haven.] An overseer of a port.

These earls and dukes appointed their special officers, as receiver, havener, and customers. Carew.
HA'VEY. n. f. [from have.] Possessor;
holder.

Valour is the chiefest virtue, and Most dignifies the haver. Shakespeare.
HA'VEY is a common word in the northern counties for oats; as, haver bread for oaten bread; perhaps properly aven, from avena, Latin.

When you would anneal, take a blue stone, such as they make haver or oat cakes upon, and lay it upon the cross bars of iron. Peascham.

HAUGHT. adj. [haut, French.]

1. Haughty; insolent; proud; contemptuous; arrogant. Obsolete.

The proud insulting Queen,
With Clifford and the haught Northumberland,
Have wrought the easy-melting king, like wax. Shakespeare.

No lord of thine, thou haught insulting man;
Nor no man's lord. Shakespeare.

2. High; proudly magnanimous.

His courage haught,
Desir'd of foreign foemen to be known,
And far abroad for strange adventures sought. Spenser.
HA'UGHTILY. adv. [from haughty.] Proudly; arrogantly; contemptuously.

Her heav'nly form too haughtily she priz'd;
His person hated, and his gifts despis'd. Dryden.

HA'UGHTINESS. n. f. [from haughty.]
Pride; arrogance; the quality of being haughty.

By the head we make known our supplications, our threatnings, our mildness, our haughtiness, our love and our hatred. Dryden.

HAUGHTY. adj. [haustaine, French.]

1. Proud; lofty; insolent; arrogant; contemptuous.

His wife, being a woman of a haughty and imperious nature, and of a wit superior to his, quickly resented the disrespect she received from him. Clarendon.

I shall sing of battles, blood and rage,
And haughty souls, that mov'd with mutual hate,
In fighting fields pursu'd and found their fate. Dryd.

2. Proudly great.

Our vanquish'd wills that pleasing force obey:
Her goodness takes our liberty away;
And haughty Britain yields to arbitrary sway. Prior.

3. Bold; adventurous; of high hazard.
Obsolete.

Who now shall give me words and sound
Equal unto this haughty enterprise?
Or who shall lend me wings, with which from ground
My lowly verse may loftily arise? Fairy Queen.

HAVING. n. f. [from have.]

1. Possession; estate; fortune.

My having is not much;
I'll make division of my present with you:
Hold, there's half my coffer. Shakesp.

2. The act or state of possessing.

Of the one side was alledged the having a picture, which the other wanted; of the other side, the first striking the shield. Sidney.

Thou art not for the fashion of these times,
Where none will sweat but for promotion;
And having that, do choak their service up,
Even with the having. Shakesp. As you like it.

3. Behaviour; regularity. This is still retained in the Scottish dialect. It may possibly be the meaning here.

The gentleman is of no having: he kept company with the wild prince and Fous: he is of too high a region; he knows too much. Shakesp.

HA'VIOUR. n. f. [for behaviour.] Conduct;
manners. Not used.

Their ill haviour garres men mislay
Both of their doctrines and their say. Spenser.

HAUL. v. a. [haler, French, to draw.]

To pull; to draw; to drag by violence.

A word which, applied to things, implies violence; and, to persons, awkwardness or rudeness. This word is liberally exemplified in hale; etymology is regarded in hale, and pronunciation in haul.

Thy Dol, and Helen of thy noble thoughts,
Is in base durance and contagious prison,
Haul'd thither by mechanick dirty hands. Shakesp.

The youth with songs and rhymes,
Some dance, some haul the rope. Denham.

Some the wheels prepare,
And fasten to the horses feet; the rest
With cables haul along th' unwieldy beast. Dryden.

In his grandeur he naturally chuses to haul up others after him whose accomplishments most resemble his own. Swift.

Thither they bent, and haul'd their ships to land;
The crooked keel divides the yellow sand. Pope.

Romp-loving misfs,
Is haul'd about in gallantry robust. Thomson.

HAUL. n. f. [from the verb.] Pull; violence in dragging.

The leap, the flap, the haul. Thomson.

HAUM. n. f. [or bame, or balme; pealm,
Saxon; baum, Dutch and Danish.] Straw.

In champion countrie a pleasure they take
To mow up their baume, for to brew and to bake:
The baume is the straw of the wheat or the rice,
Which once being reaped, they mow by and by. Tusser.

Having stripped off the baum or binds from the poles, as you pick the hops stack them up. Mortimer.

HAUNCH. n. f. [hancke, Dutch; hanche,
French; anca, Italian.]

1. The thigh; the hind hip.

Hail, groom! didst thou not see a bleeding hind,
Whose right haunch carst my stedfast arrow strike? Spenser.

To make a man able to teach his horse to stop and turn quick, and to rest upon his haunches, is of use to a gentleman both in peace and war. Locke.

2. The rear; the hind part.

Thou art a Summer bird,
Which ever in the haunch of Winter sings
The lifting up of day. Shakesp.

HAUNT. v. a. [banter, French.]

1. To frequent; to be much about any place or person.

A man who for his hospitality is so much haunted, that no news stir but come to his ears. Sidney.

Now we being brought known unto her, after once we were acquainted, and acquainted we were sooner than ourselves expected, she continually almost haunted us. Sidney.

I do haunt thee in the battle thus,
Because some tell me that thou art a king. Shakesp.

She this dangerous forest haunts,
And in sad accents utters her complaints. Waller.

Earth now
Seem'd like to heav'n, a seat where gods might dwell,

Or wander with delight, and love to haunt
Her sacred shades. Milton.

Celestial Venus haunts Idalia's groves;
Diana Cynthus, Ceres Hybla loves. Pope.

2. It is used frequently in an ill sense of one that comes unwelcome.

You wrong me, Sir, thus still to haunt my house;
I told you, Sir, my daughter is dispos'd of. Shakesp.

Oh, could I see my country-seat!
There leaning near a gentle brook,
Sleep, or peruse some ancient book;
And there in sweet oblivion drown
Those cares that haunt the court and town. Swift.

3. It is eminently used of apparitions or spectres that appear in a particular place.

Foul spirits haunt my resting place,
And ghastly visions break my sleep by night. Fairfax.

All these the woes of Oedipus have known,
Your fates, your furies, and your haunted town. Pope.

HAUNT. v. n. To be much about; to appear frequently.

I've charged thee not to haunt about my doors:
In honest plainness thou hast heard me say,
My daughter's not for thee. Shakesp. Othello.

Where they most breed and haunt, I have observ'd
The air is delicate. Shakesp. Macbeth.

HAUNT. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Place in which one is frequently found.

We set toils, nets, gins, snares and traps, for beasts, and birds in their own haunts and walks. L'Estr.

To me pertains not, she replies,
To know or care where Cupid flies;
What are his haunts, or which his way. Prior.

Where he would dwell, or whither stray.
A scene where, if a god should cast his sight,
A god might gaze and wonder with delight!
Joy touch'd the messenger of heav'n; he stay'd Entranc'd, and all the blissful haunts survey'd. Pope.

2. Habit of being in a certain place.

The haunt you have got about the courts will one day or another bring your family to beggary. Arbuthnot.

HA'UNTER. n. f. [from haunt.] Frequenter;
one that is often found in any place.

The ancient Grecians were an ingenious people, of whom the vulgar sort, such as were haunters of theatres, took pleasure in the conceits of Aristophanes.
Wotton on Education.

O goddess, haunter of the woodland green,
Queen of the nether skies! Dryden.

HA'VOCK. n. f. [hafog, Welsh, devastation.] Waste; wide and general devastation; merciless destruction.

Having been never used to have any thing of their own, they make no spare of anything, but havock
and confusion of all they meet with. Spenser.

Saul made havock of the church. Acts viii. 3.
Ye gods! what havock does ambition make Among your works! Addison's Cato.

The Rabbins, to express the great havock which has been made of the Jews, tells us, that there were such torrents of holy blood shed, as carried rocks of a hundred yards in circumference above three miles into the sea. Addison.

If it had either air or fewel, it must make a greater havock than any history mention. Cbeyn.

HA'VOCK. interj. [from the noun.] A word of encouragement to slaughter.

Why stand these royal fronts amazed thus?
Cry havock, kings! Shakesp.

With Até by his side,
Cry havock! and let loose the dogs of war. Shak.

HA'VOCK. v. a. [from the noun.] To waste; to destroy; to lay waste.

Whatsoever they leave, the soldier spoileth and havocketh; so that, between both, nothing is left. Spenser.

See, with what heat these dogs of hell advance,
To waste and havock yonder world, which I
So fair and good created! Milton.

HA'UTBOY. n. f. [haut and bois.] A wind instrument.

I told John of Gaunt he beat his own name; for you might have truss'd him and all his apparel into an eel-skin: the case of a tible hautboy was a mansion for him. Shakesp.

Now give the hautboys breath; he comes, he comes.
Dryden.

HA'UTBOY Strawberry. See STRAWBERRY.

His horse, with a half-check'd bit, and a beadstall of sheep's leather, which being restrained to keep him from stumbling, hath been often burnt, and now repaired with knots. Shakespeare.

HE'ADSTONE. n. f. [head and stone.] The first or capital stone.

The stone, which the builders refused, is become the beadstone. Pf. civiii. 24.

HE'ADSTRONG. adj. [head and strong.] Unrestrained; violent; ungovernable; resolute to run his own way; as a horse whose head cannot be held in.

An example, for beadstrong and inconsiderate zeal, no less fearful than Achitophel for proud and irreligious wisdom. Hooker.

How now, my beadstrong? where have you been gadding?

—Where I have learnt me to repent the sin
Of disobedient opposition. Shakespeare. Romeo and Juliet.
But such a beadstrong potent fault it is,
That it but mocks reproof. Shakespeare. Twelfth Night.
Heill aspires to rule

Cities of men or beadstrong multitudes,
Subject himself to anarchy within. Milton.

There's no opposing the torrent of a beadstrong multitude. L'Estrange.

Now let the beadstrong boy my will controul:
Virtue's no slave of man; no sex confines the soul:
I, for myself, th' imperial fear will gain,
And he shall wait my leisure for his reign. Dryden.

Your father's folly took a beadstrong course;
But I'll rule your's, and teach you love by force. Dryden.

Can we forget how the mad beadstrong rout
Defy'd their prince to arms, nor made account
Of oath or duty, or allegiance sworn? Philips.

I'll try if yet I can reduce to reason
This headstrong youth, and make him spurn at Cato.
Addison.

You'll be both judge and party: I am sorry thou discoverest so much of thy headstrong humour.
Arbutnot.

HEADWORKMAN. n. s. [head-work and man.] The foreman, or chief servant over the rest. Properly two words.

Can Wood be otherwise regarded than as the mechanick, the headworkman, to prepare furnace and stamps?
Swift.

HEADY. adj. [from bead.]

1. Rash; precipitate; hasty; violent; ungovernable; hurried on with passion.

Take pity of your town and of your people,
While yet the cool and temperate wind of grace
O'erblows the filthy and contagious clouds
Of beady murder, spoil and villainy.
Shakespeare.

I am advised what I say:
Neither disturb'd with the effect of wine,
Nor, beady rash, provok'd with raging ire;
Albeit my wrongs might make one wiser mad.
Shak.

I'll forbear,
And am fall'n out with my more beady will,
To take the indispos'd and sickly fit
For the sound man.
Shakespeare.

Wives, the readiest helps
To betray beady husband, rob the easy. Ben Jonson.
Those only are regarded who are true to their party; and all the talent required is to be hot, to be beady, to be violent on one side or other. Temple.

Men, naturally warm and beady, are transported with the greatest flush of good-nature. Addison.

2. Apt to affect the head.

I was entertained with a sort of wine which was very beady, but otherwise seemed to be sack. Boyle.

Since hearty beef and mutton will not do,
Here's julep-dance, pisan of song and show:
Give you strong sense, the liquor is too beady;
You're come to farce, that's all milk, already.
Dryden.

Flow, Wellsted! flow, like thine inspirer, beer;
Heady, not strong; and foaming, though not full.
Pope.

3. Violent; impetuous.

Never came reformation in a flood
With such a beady current scow'ring faults;
Nor ever hydra-headed wilfulness
So soon did lose his seat.
Shakespeare.

TO HEAL. v. a. [halgan, Gothick; hælan, Saxon; heelen, Dutch.]

1. To cure a person; to restore from hurt or sickness.

I will restore health, and beal thee of thy wounds.
Jr. xxx.

Who would not believe that our Saviour bealed
the sick, and raised the dead, when it was published by those who themselves often did the same miracles?
Addison.

Physicians, by just observations, grow up to an honourable degree of skill in the art of bealing. Watts.

2. To cure a wound or distemper.

Thou hast no bealing medicines. Jer. xxx. 12.

TO HEAR. v. n. [hyran, Saxon; hooren,
Dutch.]

1. To enjoy the sense by which sounds are distinguished.

Sound is nothing but a certain modulation of the external air, which, being gathered by the external ear, beats, as is supposed, upon the membrana tympani, which moves the four little bones in the tympanum: in like manner as it is beat by the external air, these little bones move the internal air which is in the tympanum and vestibulum; which internal air makes an impression upon the auditory nerve in the labyrinth and cochlea, according as it is moved by the little bones in the tympanum: so that, according to the various reflexions of the external air, the internal air makes various impressions upon

upon the auditory nerve, the immediate organ of bearing; and these different impressions represent different sounds.

The object of bearing is sound, whose variety is so great, that it brings in admirable store of intelligence.

With heartly welcome and an open face;

In all they did, you might discern with ease
A willing mind, and a desire to please. Dryden.

Every man may pretend to any employment, provided he has been loud and frequent in declaring himself heartly for the government. Swift.

2. In full health.

3. Vigorous; strong.

Whose laughs are heartly, though his jests are coarse,
And loves you best of all things but his horse. Pope.

4. Strong; hard; durable.

Oak and the like true heartly timber, being strong in all positions, may be better trusted in cross and transverse work. Wotton.

HEARTY-HALE. adj. [heart and hale.]

Good for the heart.

Vein-healing verben, and head-purging dill,
Sound savory, and basil heartly hale. Spenser.

HEAT. n. s. [heat, hæz, Saxon; beetle, Danish.]

1. The sensation caused by the approach or touch of fire.

Heat is a very brisk agitation of the insensible parts of the object, which produces in us that sensation from whence we denominate the object hot; so what in our sensation is heat, in the object is nothing but motion. Locke.

The word heat is used to signify the sensation we have when we are near the fire, as well as the cause of that sensation, which is in the fire itself; and thence we conclude, that there is a sort of heat in the fire resembling our own sensation: whereas in the fire there is nothing but little particles of matter, of such particular shapes as are fitted to impress such motions on our flesh as excite the sense of heat.

2. The cause of the sensation of burning.

The sword which is made fiery doth not only cut by reason of the sharpness which simply it hath but also burns by means of that heat which it hath from fire. Hooker.

3. Hot weather.

After they came down into the valley, and found the intolerable heats there, and knew no means of lighter apparel, they were forced to go naked. Bacon.

Mark well the flow'ring almonds in the wood;
The glebe will answer to the sylvan reign;
Great heats will follow, and large crops of grain. Dryden.

The Pope would not comply with the proposal, as fearing the heats might advance too far before they had finished their work, and produce a pestilence among the people. Addison.

4. State of any body under the action of the fire.

The heats smiths take of their iron are a blood-red heat, a white flame heat, and a sparkling or welding heat. Mexon.

5. Fermentation; effervescence.

6. One violent action unintermitted.

The continual agitations of the spirits must needs be a weakening of any constitution, especially in age:
and many caules are required for refreshment betwixt
the heats. Dryden.

7. The state of being once hot; a single effort.

I'll strike my fortune with him at a heat,
And give him not the leisure to forget. Dryden.

They the turn'd lines on golden anvils beat,
Which look as if they struck them at a heat. Tate.

8. A course at a race, between each of which courses there is an intermission.

Feign'd zeal, you saw, set out the speedier pace;
But the last heat, plain dealing won the race. Dryden.

9. Pimples in the face; flush.

It has raised animosities in their hearts, and heats
in their faces, and broke out in their ribbands. Addison.

10. Agitation of sudden or violent passion; vehemence of action.

They seeing what forces were in the city with them, issued against the tyrant while they were in this heat, before practices might be used to disserve them. Sidney.

The friend hath lost his friend;
And the best quarrels, in the heat are curst,
By those that feel their sharpness. Shakesp.

It might have pleased in the heat and hurry of his rage, but must have displeased in cool sedate reflection. South.

We have spilt no blood but on the heat of the battle, or the chase. Atterbury.

One playing at hazard, drew a huge heap of gold;
but in the heat of play, never observed a sharper, who swept it into his hat. Swift.

11. Faction; contest; party rage.

They are in a most warlike preparation, and hope to come upon them in the heat of their division. Shakespeare.

I was sorry to hear with what partiality and popular heat elections were carried. King Charles.

What can more gratify the Phrygian foe
Than those distemper'd heats? Dryden.

12. Ardour of thought or elocution.

Plead it to her
With all the strength and heat of eloquence, Fraternal love and friendship can inspire. Addison's Cato.

TO HEAT. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To make hot; to endue with the power of burning.

He commanded that they should heat the furnace one seven times more than it was wont to be heated. Dan. iii. 19.

2. To cause to ferment.

Hops lying undried heat them, and changes their colour. Mortimer.

3. To

3. To make the constitution feverish.

Thou art going to Lord Timon's feast.
—Ay, to see meat till knaves, and wine beat fools.

Whatever increaseth the density of the blood, even without increasing its clarity, beats, because a denser body is hotter than a rarer.

3. To warm with vehemence of passion or desire.

A noble emulation beats your breast,
And your own fame now robs you of your rest.

5. To agitate the blood and spirits with action.

When he was well beated the younger champion could not stand before him; and we find the elder contended not for the gift, but for the honour.

HE'ATER. n. f. [from beat.] An iron made hot, and put into a box-iron, to smooth and plait linen.

HEATH n. f. [erica, Latin.]
1. A shrub of low stature; the leaves are small, and abide green all the year.

In Kent they cut up the beats in May, burn it,
and spread the ashes.
Oft with bolder wing they soaring dare
The purple beats.

2. A place overgrown with heath.

Say, from whence
You owe this strange intelligence; or why,
Upon this blasted beats, you stop our way
With such prophetic greeting.
Health and long life have been found rather on the peak of Derbyshire, and the beats of Staffordshire, than fertile soils.

3. A place covered with shrubs of whatever kind.

Some woods of oranges, and beats of rosemary,
will smell a great way into the sea.

HE'ATHCOCK. n. f. [beats and cock.] A large fowl that frequents heaths.

Cornwall hath quail, rail, partridge, pheasant,
beats-cock, and plover.

HEATH-POUT. n. f. [beats and pout.] A bird.

Not beats-pout, or the rarer bird
Which Phæbus or Iona yields,
More pleasing morsels would afford
Than the fat olives of my fields.

HEATH-PEAS. n. f. A species of bitter VETCH, which see.

HEATH-ROSE. n. f. [beats and rose.] A plant.

HE'ATHEN. n. f. [heyden, German.] The gentiles; the pagans; the nations unacquainted with the covenant of grace.

Deliver us from the beathen, that we may give thanks to thy holy name.

If the opinion of others, whom we think well of be a ground of assent, men have reason to be beathen in Japan, mahometans in Turkey, papists in Spain, and protestants in England.

In a paper of morality, I consider how I may recommend the particular virtues I treat of, by the precepts or examples of the ancient beathen.

HE'ATHEN. adj. Gentile; pagan.

It was impossible for a beathen author to relate these things, because if he had believed them, he would no longer have been a beathen.

HEATHENISH. adj. [from beathen.]

1. Belonging to the Gentiles.

When the apostles of our Lord and Saviour were ordained to alter the laws of beathenish religion, chosen they were, St. Paul excepted; the rest unschooled altogether, and unlettered men.

2. Wild; savage; rapacious; cruel.

The Moor did tread under their beathenish feet, whatever little they found yet there standing.

That execrable Cromwell, made a beathenish or rather inhuman edict against the episcopal clergy, that they should neither preach, pray in publick,
baptize, marry, bury, nor teach school.

HE'ATHENISHLY. adv. [from beathenish.]

After the manner of heathens.

HE'ATHENISM. n. f. [from beathen.]
Gentilism; paganism.

It signifies the acknowledgment of the true God,
in opposition to beathenism.

HE'ATHY. adj. [from beath.] Full of heath.

This sort of land they order the same way with the beathy land.

TO HEAVE. v. a. pret. heaved, anciently bore; part. heaved, or heven.

1. To lift; to raise from the ground.

So stretch'd out huge in length the arch-fiend lay, Chain'd on the burning lake; nor ever thence Had ris'n or beav'd his head, but that the will
And high permission of all ruling heaven
Left him at large.

2. To carry.

Now we bear the king
Tow'rd Calais: grant him there: and there being seen,

Heave him away upon your winged thoughts
Athwart the sea.

3. To raise; to lift.

So daunted, when the giant saw the knight,
His heavy hand he beaved up on high,
And him to dust thought to have batter'd quite.

I cannot beave
My heart into my mouth.

He dy'd in fight;
Fought next my person, as in concert fought,
Save when he beav'd his shield in my defence,
And on his naked side receiv'd my wound.

4. To cause to swell.

The groans of ghosts, that cleave the earth with pain,
And beave it up: they pant and stick half way.

The glittering finny swarms,
That beave our faiths and crowd upon our shores.

5. To force up from the breast.

Made she no verbal quest?
—Yes, once or twice she beav'd the name of father
Pantingly forth, as if it prest her heart.
The wretched animal beav'd forth such groans
That their discharge did stretch his leathern coat
Almost to bursting.

6. To exalt; To elevate.

Poor shadow painted queen;
One beav'd on high, to be hurl'd down below.

7. To puff; to elate.

The Scots, beaved up into high hope of victory, took the English for foolish birds fallen into their net, forsook their hill, and marched into the plain.

TO HEAVE. v. n.

1. To pant; to breathe with pain.

'Tis such as you,
That creep like shadows by him, and do sigh
At each his needless beavings; such as you Nourish the cause of his awaking.
He beaves for breath, which, from his lungs
supply'd,
And fetch'd from far, distends his lab'ring side.

2. To labour.

The church of England had struggled and beaved
at a reformation ever since Wickliff's days.

3. To rise with pain; to swell and fall.

Thou hast made my curdled blood run back,
My heart beave up, my hair to rise in bristles.

The wand'ring breath was on the wing to part;
Weak was the pulse, and hardly beav'd the heart.

No object affects my imagination so much as the sea or ocean: I cannot see the beaving of this prodigious bulk of waters, even in a calm, without a very pleasing astonishment.

Frequent for breath his panting bosom beaves.

The beaving tide

In widen'd circles beats on either side.

4. To keck; to feel a tendency to vomit.

HEAVE. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Lift; exertion or effort upwards.

None could guess whether the next heave of the earthquake would settle them on the first foundation, or swallow them.

2. Rising of the breast.

There's matter in these sighs; these profound beaves

You must translate; 'tis fit we understand them.

3. Effort to vomit.

4. Struggle to rise.

But after many strains and beaves,
He got up to his saddle eaves.

HEAVE OFFERING. n. f. An offering among the Jews.

Ye shall offer a cake of the first of your dough for an heave offering, as ye do the heave offering of the threshing floor.

HE'AVEN. n. f. [heopon, which seems to be derived from heop, the places over head, Saxon.]

1. The regions above; the expanse of the sky.

A station like the herald Mercury,
New lighted on a heaven killing hill.

Thy race in time to come Shall spread the conquests of imperial Rome.
Rome, whose ascending tow'rs shall beav'n invade,
Involving earth and ocean in her shade.

The words are taken more properly for the air and ether than for the heavens.
This act, with shouts, beav'n high, the friendly band

Applaud.
Some fires may fall from heaven.

2. The habitation of God, good angels, and pure souls departed.

It is a knell
That summons thee to heaven, or to hell.

These, the late
Heav'n banish'd host, left desert utmost hell.

All yet left of that revolted rout,
Heav'n fall'n, in station stood, or just array,
Sublime with expectation.

3. The supreme power; the sovereign of heaven.

Now beav'n help him!
The will

And high permission of all-ruling heaven
Left him at large.

The prophets were taught to know the will of God, and thereby instruct the people, and enabled to prophesy, as a testimony of their being sent by beav'n.

4. The pagan gods; the celestials.

Take physick, pomp;
Expose thyself to feel what wretches feel,
That thou may'st shake the superflux to them,
And show the heavens more just.

They can judge as fully of his worth,
As I can of those mysteries which heaven
Will not have the world to know.

Heav'n! what a spring was in his arm to throw!
How high he held his shield, and rose at ev'ry blow.

5. Elevation; sublimity.

O, for a muse of fire, that would ascend
The brightest heaven of invention.

6. It is often used in composition.

HEAVEN-BEGOT. Begot by a celestial power.

If I am beav'n-begot, assert your son
By some sure sign. Dryden.

HEAVEN-BORN. Descended from the celestial regions; native of heaven.

If once a fever fires his sulphurous blood,
In every fit he feels the hand of God,
And beav'n-born flame. Dryden's Juvenal.

Oh beav'n-born sisters! source of art!
Who charm the sense, or mend the heart;
Who lead fair virtue's train along,
Moral truth, and mystick song! Pope.

HEAVEN-BRED. Produced or cultivated in heaven.

Much is the force of heaven-bred poetry. Shakefp.

HEAVEN-BUILT. Built by the agency of gods.

His arms had wrought the destin'd fall
Of sacred Troy, and raz'd her beav'n-built wall. Pope.

HEAVEN-DIRECTED.

1. Raised towards the sky.

Who taught that beav'n-directed spire to rise?
Pope.

2. Taught by the powers of heaven.

O sacred weapon; left for truth's defence;
To all but heaven-directed hands deny'd,
The muse may give it, but the gods must guide. Pope.

HEAVENLY. adj. [from heaven.]

1. Resembling heaven; supremely excellent.

As the love of heaven makes one heavenly, the love of virtue virtuous, so doth the love of the world, make one become worldly. Sidney.

Not Maro's muse, who sung the mighty man;
Nor Pindar's beav'nly lyre, nor Horace when a swan. Dryden.

2. Celestial; inhabiting heaven.

Adoring first the genius of the place,
Then earth, the mother of the beav'nly race. Dryden.

HEAVENLY. adv.

1. In a manner resembling that of heaven.

In these deep solitudes and awful cells,
Where beav'nly pensive contemplation dwells,
And ever-musing melancholy reigns,
What means this tumult in a vestal's veins? Pope.

2. By the agency or influence of heaven.

Truth and peace and love shall ever shine
About the supreme throne
Of him, whose happy-making light alone,
Our beav'nly guided soul shall climb. Milton.

HEAVENWARD. adv. [heaven and peav,
Saxon.] Towards heaven.

I prostrate lay,

By various doubts impell'd, or to obey,
Or to object; at length, my mournful look Heav'nward crept, determin'd, thus I spoke. Prior.

HE'AVILY. adv. [from heavy.]

1. With great ponderousness.

2. Grievously; afflictively.

Ease must be impracticable to the envious; they lie under a double misfortune; common calamities and common blessings fall heavily upon them. Collier.

3. Sorrowfully; with grief.

I came hither to transport the tydings,
Which I have heavily borne. Shakefp.
This O'Neil took very heavily because his condition in the army was less pleasant to him. Clarendon.

4. With an air of dejection.

Why looks your grace so heavily to-day?
—O, I have pass'd a miserable night. Shakefp.

HE'AVINESS. n. s. [from heavy.]

1. Ponderousness; the quality of being heavy; weight.

The subject is concerning the heaviness of several bodies, or the proportion that is required betwixt any weight and the power which may move

it. Wilkins.

2. Dejection of mind; depression of spirit.

We are, at the hearing of some, more inclined unto sorrow and heaviness; of some more mollified, and softened in mind. Hooker.

Against ill chances men are ever merry;
But heaviness foreruns the good event. Shakefp.

Let us not burthen our remembrance with An heaviness that's gone. Shakefp.

Heaviness in the heart of man maketh it stoop;
but a good word maketh it glad. Prov. xii. 25.

Ye greatly rejoice; though now for a season ye are in heaviness, through manifold temptations.

1 Pet. i. 6.

3. Inaptitude to motion or thought; sluggishness; torpidness; dulness of spirit;
languidness; languor.

Our strength is all gone into heaviness,
That makes the weight. Shakefp.

What means this heaviness that hangs upon me?
This lethargy that creeps through all my senses.

Addison.

He would not violate that sweet recess,
And found besides a welcome heaviness,
Which seiz'd his eyes. Dryden.

A sensation of drowsiness, oppression, heaviness, and lassitude, are signs of a too plentiful meal. Arbutnot.

4. Oppression; crush; affliction: as, the heaviness of taxes.

5. Deepness or richness of soil.

As Alexandria exported many commodities, so it received some, which, by reason of the fatness and heaviness of the ground, Egypt did not produce;
such as metals, wood, and pitch. Arbutnot.

HE'AVY. adj. [heav, Saxon.]

1. Weighty; ponderous; tending strongly to the centre; contrary to light.

Mersennus tells us, that a little child, with an engine of an hundred double pulleys, might move this earth, though it were much heavier than it is. Wilkins.

2. Sorrowful; dejected; depressed.

Let me not be light,
For a light wife doth make a heavy husband. Shakefp.

3. Grievous; oppressive; afflictive.

Menelaus bore an heavy hand over the citizens, having a malicious mind. 2 Mac. v. 23.

Let not your ears despise my tongue for ever,
Which shall possess them with the heaviest sound
That ever yet they heard. Shakefp.

If the cause be not good, the king himself hath a heavy reckoning to make. Shakefp.

Pray for this good man, and for his issue,
Whose heavy hand hath bow'd you to the grave,
And beggar'd your's for ever. Shakefp.

Chartres, at the levee,
Tells with a sneer the tydings heavy. Swift.

4. Wanting alacrity; wanting briskness of appearance.

My heavy eyes, you say, confess
A heart to love and grief inclined. Prior.

5. Wanting spirit or rapidity of sentiment;
unanimated.

A work was to be done, a heavy writer to be encouraged, and accordingly many thousand copies were bespoke. Swift.

6. Wanting activity; indolent; lazy.

Fair, tall, his limbs with due proportion join'd;
But of a heavy, dull, degenerate mind. Dryden.

7. Drowsy; dull; torpid.

Peter and they that were with him were heavy with sleep. Luke.

8. Slow; sluggish.

But let thy spiders that suck up thy venom,
And heavy, gaited toads lie in their way. Shakefp.

9. Stupid; foolish.

This heavy headed revel, East and West
Makes us traduc'd, and tax'd of other nations. Shakefp.

I would not be accounted so base minded, or heavy headed, that I will confess that any of them is for valour, power, or fortune better than myself. Kneller.

10. Burdensome; troublesome; tedious.

I put into thy hands what has been the diversion of some of my idle and heavy hours. Locke.

When alone, your time will not lie heavy upon your hands for want of some trifling amusement. Swift.

11. Loaded; incumbered; burthened.

Hearing that there were forces coming against him, and not willing that they should find his men heavy and laden with booty, he returned unto Scotland. Bacon's Henry VII.

12. Not easily digested; not light to the stomach.

Such preparations as retain the oil or fat, are most heavy to the stomach, which makes baked meat hard of digestion. Arbutnot.

13. Rich in soil; fertile; as, heavy lands.

14. Deep; cumbersome; as, heavy roads.

HE'AVY. adv. As an adverb it is only used in composition; heavily.

Your carriages were heavy laden; they are a burden to the weary beast. Isa. xlv. 1.

Come unto me all ye that labour and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest. Matth. xi. 28.

HE'BDOMAD. n. s. [hebdomas, Latin.]

A week; a space of seven days.

Computing by the medical month, the first heb-domad or septenary consists of six days, seventeen hours and a half. Brown.

HEBDO'MADAL. } adj. [from hebdomas, HEBDO'MADARY. } Latin.] Weekly;

consisting of seven days.

As for hebdomadal periods, or weeks in regard of their sabbaths, they were observed by the Hebrews. Brown.

To HE'BETATE. v. a. [hebet, Latinhebet, French.] To dull; to blunt; to stupidify.

The eye, especially if hebetated, might cause the same perception. Harvey.

Beef may confer a robustness on the limbs of my son, but will hebetate and clog his intellects. Arbutnot and Pope.

HEBETA'TION. n. s. [from hebetate.]

1. The act of dulling.

2. The state of being dulled.

HE'BETUDE. n. s. [hebetudo Latin.] Dulness; obtuseness; bluntness.

The pestilent seminaries, according to their grossness or subtilty, activity, or hebetude, cause more or less truculent plagues. Harvey.

HE'BRAISM. n. s. [hebraisme, French; hebraismus, Latin.] A Hebrew idiom.

Milton has infused a great many Latinisms, as well as Græcisms, and sometimes Hebraisms, into his poem. Speilator.

HE'BRAIST. n. s. [hebraus, Latin.] A man skilled in Hebrew.

HE'BRICIAN. n. s. [from Hebrew.] One skilful in Hebrew.

The words are more properly taken for the air or ether than the heavens, as the best Hebricians understand them. Raleigh.

The nature of the Hebrew verse, as the meanest Hebrician knoweth, consists of uneven feet. Peacham.

HE'CATOMB. n. s. [hecatombe, French; ἑκατόμβη.] A sacrifice of an hundred cattle.

In rich mens homes
I bid kill some beasts; but no hecatombs;
None starve, none surfeit so. Down.

One of these three is a whole hecatomb,
And therefore only one of them shall die. Dryden.

Her triumphant sons in war succeed,
And slaughter'd hecatombs around 'em bleed. Addison.

HE'CTICAL. } adj. [hectique, French,
HE'CTICK. } [from ἥκτα.]

1. Habitual; constitutional.

This word is joined only to that kind of fever which is slow and continual, and ending in a consumption, is the contrary to those fevers which arise from a plethora, or too great fullness from obstruction. It is attended with too lax a state of the excretory passages, and generally those of the skin; whereby so much runs off as leaves not resistance enough in the contractile vessels to keep them sufficiently distended, so that they vibrate oftener, agitate the fluids the more, and keep them thin and hot.

A bedick fever hath got hold
Of the whole substance not to be controul'd.

Dante.

2. Troubled with a morbid heat.

No Heclick student scars the gentle maid. Taylor.
HE'CTICK. n. f. An heclick fever.

Like the bedick in my blood he rages,
And thou must cure me. Shakefp. Hamlet.

HE'CTOR. n. f. [from the name of Heclor, the great Homeric warrior.] A bully; a blustering, turbulent, perversive, noisy fellow.

Those usurping bedors, who pretend to honour without religion, think the charge of a lye a blot not to be washed out but by blood. South.

We'll take one cooling cup of nectar,
And drink to this celestial bedor. Prior.

To HE'CTOR. v. a. [from the noun.] To threaten; to treat with insolent authoritative terms.

They reckon they must part with honour together with their opinion, if they suffer themselves to be bedored out of it. Government of the Tongue.

The weak low spirit Fortune makes her slave;
But she's a drudge, when bedor'd by the brave. Dryden.

An honest man, when he came home at night,
Found another fellow domineering in his family, bedoring his servants, and calling for supper. Arbuthnot's History of John Bull.

To HE'CTOR. v. n. To play the bully; to bluster.

They have attacked me, some with piteous moans and outcries, others grinning and only shewing their teeth, others ranting and bedoring, others scolding and reviling. Stillingfleet.

One would think the bedoring, the storming, the sullen, and all the different species of the angry, should be cured. Specl.

Don Carlos made her chief director,
That she might o'er the servants bedor. Swift.

HEDE'CEOUS. adj. [hederaceus, Lat.] Producing ivy. DiB.

HEDGE. n. f. [hegge, Saxon.] A fence made round grounds with prickly bushes, or woven twigs.

It is a good wood for fire, if kept dry; and is very useful for stakes in hedges. Mortimer.

The gardens unfold variety of colours to the eye every morning, and the hedges breath is beyond all perfume. Pope.

Through the verdant maze
Of sweet-briar hedges I pursue my walk. Thomson.

HEDGE, prefixed to any word, notes something mean, vile, of the lowest class: perhaps from a bedge, or bedge born man, a man without any known place of birth.

There are five in the first shew: the pedant, the braggart, the bedge-priest, the fool, and the boy. Shakespeare.

The clergy do much better than a little bedge, contemptible, illiterate vicar can be presumed to do. Swift.

A person, who, by his style and literature, seems to have been the corrector of a bedge-priest in Little Britain, proceeded gradually to an author. Swift.

To HEDGE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To inclose with a hedge, or fence of wood dry or growing.

Hedge thy possession about with thorns. Ecclef.
Those alleys must be bedged at both ends, to keep out the wind. Bacon.

2. To obstruct.

I will bedge up thy way with thorns. Hof. ii. 6.

3. To incircle for defence.

England, bedg'd in with the main,
That water-walled bulwark, still secure
And confident from foreign purposes. Shakefp.

There's such divinity doth bedge a king,
That treason can but peep to what it would. Shakespeare.

4. To shut up within an inclosure.

It must not be paid and exported in ready money; so says our law; but that is a law to bedge in the cuckoo, and serves for no purpose; for if we export not goods, for which our merchants have money due to them, how can it be paid by bills of exchange. Locke.

5. To force into a place already full. This seems to be mistaken for edge. To edge in, is to put in by the way that requires least room; but bedge may signify to thrust in with difficulty, as into a bedge.

You forget yourself
To bedge me in. Shakefp. Julius Caesar.

When I was hasty, thou delay'd'st me longer:
I pr'ythee, let me bedge one moment more Into thy promise; for thy life preserv'd. Dryd.

When you are sent on an errand, be sure to bedge in some business of your own. Swift.

To HEDGE. v. n. To shift; to hide the head.

I myself sometimes hiding mine honour in my necessity, am fain to shuffle, to bedge, and to lurch. Shakespeare.

HEDGE-BORN. adj. [bedge and barn.] Of no known birth; meanly born.

He then, that is not furnish'd in this sort,
Doth but usurp the sacred name of knight,
And should, if I were worthy to be judge,
Be quite degraded, like a bedge-born swain,
That doth presume to boast of gentle blood. Shak.

HEDGE CREEPER. n. f. [bedge and creep.] One that skulks under hedges for bad purposes.

HEDGE-FUMITORY. n. f. A plant; fumaria sepium. Ainsworth.

HEDGE-HOG. n. f. [bedge and bog; crinaceus.]

1. An animal set with prickles, like thorns in an hedge.

Like bedge-bogs, which Lie tumbling in my bare-foot way, and mount
Their prickles at my foot-fall. Shakefp. Tempst.

Few have belief to swallow, or hope enough to experience, the collyrium of Albertus; that is to make one see in the dark: yet thus much, according unto his receipt, will the right eye of an bedge-bog, boiled in oil, and preserved in a brazen vessel, effect. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

The bedge-bog hath his backside and flanks thick set with strong and sharp prickles; and besides, by the help of a muscle, can contract himself into a globular figure, and so withdraw his whole underpart, head, belly and legs, within his thicket of prickles. Ray.

2. A term of reproach.

Did'st thou not kill this king?
— I grant ye.
— Do'st grant me, bedge-bog? Shakefp.

3. A plant; trefoil; medica echinata. Ainsworth.

4. The globe fish; orbis echinatus. Ainsw.

HEDGE-HYSSOP. n. f. [bedge and hyssop.] A species of willowwort; gratiola.

Hedge-hyssop is a purging medicine, and a very rough one: externally it is said to be a vulnerary. Hill's Mat. Medica.

HEDGE-MUSTARD. n. f. A plant.

HEDGE-NETTLE. n. f. A plant; galeopsis. Ainsworth.

HEDGE-NOTE. n. f. [bedge and note.] A word of contempt for low-writing.

When they began to be somewhat better bred, they left their bedge-notes for another sort of poem, which was also full of pleasant railery. Dryd.

HEDGE-PIG. n. f. [bedge and pig.] A young hedge-hog.

Thrice the brindled cat hath mew'd,
Thrice and once the bedge-pig whin'd. Shakefp.

HEDGE-ROW. n. f. [bedge and row.] The series of trees or bushes planted for inclosures.

Sometime walking not unseen
By bedge-row elms, on hillocks green. Milton.

The fields in the northern side are divided by bedge-rows of myrtle. Berkley to Pope.

HEDGE-SPARROW. n. f. [bedge and sparrow; curruca.] A sparrow that lives in bushes, distinguished from a sparrow that builds in thatch.

The bedge-sparrow fed the cuckoo so long,
That it had its head bit off by its young. Sidney.

HE'DGING-BILL. n. f. [bedge and bill.] A cutting hook used in making hedges.

Comes matter Dametas with a bedging-bill in his hand, chaffing and swearing. Shakefp.

HE'DGEE. n. f. [from bedge.] One who makes hedges.

The labour'd ox
In his loose traces from the furrow came
And the twink'd bedger at his supper sat. Milton.

He would be laughed at, that should go about to make a fine dancer out of a country bedger at paid fifty. Locke.

To HEED. v. a. [heban, Saxon.] To mind; to regard; to take notice of; to attend.

With pleasure Argus the musician beeds;
But wonders much at those new vocal reeds. Dryd.

He will no more have clear ideas of all the operations of his mind, than he will have all the particular ideas of any landscape or clock, who will not turn his eyes to it and with attention beed all the parts of it. Locke.

HEED. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Care; attention.

With wanton beed and giddy cunning,
The melting voice through mazes running. Milton.

Take beed that, in their tender years, ideas, that have no natural cohesion, come not to be united in their heads. Locke.

Thou must take beed, my Portius;
The world has all its eyes on Cato's son. Addison.

2. Caution; fearful attention; suspicious watch.

Either wise bearing or ignorant carriage is caught as men catch diseases, one of another; therefore, let men take beed of their company. Shakespeare.

Take beed; have open eye; for thieves do foot by night:

Take beed ere Summer comes, or cuckoo birds affright. Shakefp. Merry Wives of Windsor.

3. Care to avoid.

We should take beed of the neglect or contempt of of his worship. Tillotson.

4. Notice; observation.

Speech must come by hearing and learning; and birds give more beed, and mark words more than beasts. Bacon.

5. Seriousness; staidness.

He did unseal them; and the first he view'd,
He did it with a serious mind; a beed

Was in his countenance. Shakefp.

6. Regard; respectful notice.

It is a way of calling a man a fool, when no beed is given to what he says. L'Estrange.

HE'DFUL. adj. [from beed.]

1. Watchful; suspicious; vigilant.

Give him beedful note;
For I mine eyes will rivet to his face;

And, after, we will both our judgments join,
In censure of his seeming. Shakefp. Hamlet.

2. Attentive; careful; observing; with of.

I am commanded
To tell the passion of my sovereign's heart.

Where

Where fame, late en'ring at his beedful ears,
Hath plac'd thy beauty's image and thy virtue.
Shakespeare.

To him one of the other twins was bound,
Whilst I had been like beedful of the other.
Shakespeare.

Thou, beedful of advice, secure proceed;
My praise the precept is, be thine the deed.
Pope.

HE'DFULLY. adv. [from beedful.] Attentively; carefully; cautiously.

Let the learner maintain an honourable opinion of his instructor, and beedfully listen to his instructions, as one willing to be led. Watts.

HE'DFULNESS. n. f. [from beedful.] Caution; vigilance; attention.

HE'DILY. adv. Cautiously; vigilantly.
Diſt.

HE'DINESS. n. f. Caution; vigilance.
Diſt.

HE'DLESS. adj. [from beed.] Negligent; inattentive; careless; thoughtless; regardless; unobserving: with of.

The beedless lover does not know Whose eyes they are that wound him so. Waller.
Heedless of verse, and hopeless of the crown,
Scarcely half a wit, and more than half a clown.
Dryden.

Some ideas which have more than once offered themselves to the senses, have yet been little taken notice of; the mind being either beedless as in children, or otherwise employed, as in men. Locke.

Surprises are often fatal to beedless unguarded innocence.
Sherlock.

HE'DLESSLY. adv. [from beedless.] Carelessly; negligently; inattentively.

Whilst ye discharge the duties of matrimony, ye beedlessly slide into sin. Arbuthnot and Pope.

HE'DLESSNESS. n. f. [from beedless.] Carelessness; thoughtlessness; negligence; inattention.

In the little harms they suffer from knocks and falls,
they should not be pitied, but bid do so again;
which is a better way to cure their beedlessness.
Locke.

HEEL. n. f. [bele, Saxon.]

1. The part of the foot that protuberates behind.

If the luxated bone be distorted backward, it lieth over the heel bone. Wifeman's Surgery.

2. The whole foot of animals.

The stag recalls his strength, his speed,
His winged heels, and then his armed head;
With these t' avoid, with that his fate to meet;
But fear prevails, and bids him trust his feet.
Denham.

Pegasus appeared hanging off the side of a rock, with a fountain running from his heel. Addison.

3. The feet, as employed in flight.

Nothing is commoner, in times of danger, than for men to leave their masters to bears and tygers, and shew them a fair pair of heels for't. L'Eſtrange.

4. To be at the HEELS. To pursue closely; to follow hard.

Sir, when comes your book forth?
—Upon the heels of my presentment. Shakespeare.
But is there no sequel at the heels of this mother's admiration? Shakespeare. Hamlet.

5. To attend closely.

Could we break our way
By force, and at our heels all hell should rise
With blackest insurrection, to confound Heav'n's purest light. Milton.

6. To pursue as an enemy.

The Spaniards fled on towards the North to seek their fortunes, being still chased by the English navy at their heels, until they were fain to give them over for want of powder. Bacon.

Want! hungry want! that hungry meagre fiend,
Is at my heels, and chases me in view. Orway.

7. To follow close as a dependant.

Through proud London he came sighing on,
After th' admired heels of Bolingbroke. Shakespeare.

8. To lay by the HEELS. To fetter; to shackle: to put into gyves.

If the king blame me for't, I'll lay ye all
By th' heels, and suddenly; and on your heads
Clap round fines for neglect. Shakespeare.

One half of man, his mind,
Is, sui juris, unconfin'd,
And cannot be laid by the heels. Hudibras.

I began to smoke that they were a parcel of mummers;
and wondered that none of the Middlesex justices took care to lay some of them by the heels. Addison.

9. Any thing shaped like a heel.

At the other side is a kind of heel or knob, to break cloths with. Mortimer's Husbandry.

10. The back part of a stocking: whence the phrase to be out at heels, to be worn out.

A good man's fortune may grow out at heels.
Shakespeare.

To HEEL. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To dance.

I cannot sing,
Nor heel the high lavolt, nor sweeten talk. Shakespeare.

2. To lean on one side; as, the ship heels.

To HEEL. v. a. To arm a cock.

HEELER. n. f. [from heel.] A cock that strikes well with his heels.

HEEL-PIECE. n. f. [heel and piece.] A piece fixed on the hinder part of the shoe, to supply what is worn away.

To HEEL-PIECE. v. a. [heel and piece.] To put a piece of leather on a shoe heel.

Some blamed Mrs. Bull for new heel-piecing her shoes.
Arb.

HEFT. n. f. [from heave.]

1. Heaving; effort.

May be in the cup
A spider sleep'd, and one may drink, depart,
And yet partake no venom; for his knowledge
Is not infected: but if one present
Th' abhor'd ingredient to his eye, make known
How he hath drunk, he cracks his gorge, his sides With violent hefts. Shakespeare. Winter's Tale.

2. [For haft.] Handle.

His oily side devours both blade and heft.
Waller.

HE'GIRA. n. f. [Arabick.] A term in chronology, signifying the epocha, or account of time, used by the Arabians and Turks, who begin their computation from the day that Mahomet was forced to make his escape from the city of Mecca, which happened on Friday, July 16. A. D. 622, under the reign of the emperor Heraclius. Harris.

HE'FER. n. f. [heafone Saxon.] A young cow.

Who finds the beifer dead and bleeding fresh,
And fees fast by a butcher with an axe,
But will suspect 'twas he that made the slaughter?
Shakespeare.

A beifer will put up her nose, and snuff in the air,
against the rain.
For her the flocks refuse their verdant food,
Nor thirty befers seek the gliding flood. Pope.

1. An expression of slight langour and uneasiness.

Heigh ho! an't be not four by the day, I'll be hang'd.
Shak.

2. It is used by Dryden, contrarily to custom, as a voice of exultation.

We'll toss off our ale 'till we cannot stand,
And heigh-bo for the honour of Old England.
Dryd.

HEIGHT. n. f. [from high.]

1. Elevation above the ground; indefinite.

Into what pit thou seest,
From what height fall'n! Milton.

An amphitheatre's amazing height
Here fills the eye with terror and delight. Addison.

2. Altitude; definite space measured upwards.

Abroad I'll study thee,
As he removes far off, that great height takes.
Donne.

There is in Ticinium a church that is in length one hundred feet, in breadth twenty, and in height near fifty. Bacon.

An amphitheatre appear'd,
Rais'd in degrees, to sixty paces rear'd;
That when a man was plac'd in one degree,
Height was allow'd for him above to see. Dryden.

3. Degree of latitude. Latitudes are higher as they approach the pole.

Guinea lieth to the North sea, in the same height
as Peru to the South. Abbot.

4. Summit; ascent; towering eminence; high place.

From Alpine heights the father first descends;
His daughter's husband in the plain attends.
Dryd. Æn.

5. Elevation of rank; station of dignity; great degree of excellence.

By him that rais'd me to this careful height,
From that contented hap which I enjoy'd. Shak.
Ten kings had from the Norman conqu'ror reign'd,
When England to her greatest height attain'd,
Of pow'r, dominion, glory, wealth, and state.
Daniel.

Every man of learning need not enter into their difficulties, nor climb the heights to which some others have arrived. Watts.

6. The utmost degree; full completion.

Putrefaction doth not rise to its height at once.
Bacon.

Did not she
Of Timna first betray me, and reveal
The secret, wrested from me in the height
Of nuptial love profess'd? Milton.

Hide me from the face
Of God, whom to behold was then my height
Of happiness! Milton.
Despair is the height of madness. Sherlock.

7. Utmost exertion.

Come on, sir; I shall now put you to the height of your breeding. Shakespeare.

8. State of excellence; advance towards perfection.

Social duties are carried to greater heights, and enforced with stronger motives, by the principles of our religion. Addison.

To HE'IGHTEN. v. a. [from height.]

1. To raise higher.

2. To improve; to meliorate.

3. To aggravate.

Foreign states used their endeavours to heighten our confusions, and plunge us into all the evils of a civil war. Addison.

4. To improve by decorations.

As in a room, contrived for state, the height of the roof should bear a proportion to the area; so in the heightenings of poetry, the strength and vehemence of figures should be suited to the occasion.
Dryden.

HEINOUS. adj. [haineux, French, from hane, hate; or from the Teutonic, boon, shame.] Atrocious; wicked in a high degree.

To abrogate or innovate the gospel of Christ, if men or angels should attempt, it were most heinous and accursed sacrilege. Hooker.

This is the man should do the bloody deed:
The image of a wicked heinous fault
Lives in his eye. Shakespeare.

As it is a most heinous, so it is a most dangerous impiety to despise him that can destroy us. Tillotson.

HE'INOUSLY. adv. [from heinous.] Atrociously; wickedly.

HE'INOUS-

HEL

HE'INOUSNESS. n. f. [from heinous.] Atrociousness; wickedness.

He who can treat offences, provoking God, as jests and trifles, must have little sense of the heinousness of them. Rogers.

HEIR. n. f. [beire, old French; heres, Latin.]

1. One that is inheritor of any thing after the present possessor.

An heir signifies the eldest, who is, by the laws of England, to have all his father's land. Locke.

What lady is that?

The heir of Alanfon, Rosaline her name. Shakef.

That I'll give my voice on Richard's side,

To bar my master's heirs in true descent,

God knows I will not do it. Shakespeare.

Being heirs together of the grace of life. 1 Pet. iii. 7.

Sunk is the hero, and his glory lost,

And I his heir in misery alone. Pope.

The heirs to titles and large estates have a weakness in their eyes, and a tenderness in their constitutions. Swift.

2. One newly inheriting an estate.

The young extravagant heir had got a new steward, and was resolved to look into his estate. Swift.

TO HEIR. v. a. [from the noun.] To inherit.

His son in blooming youth was snatch'd by fate,

One only daughter heir'd the royal state. Dryden.

HE'IRESS. n. f. [from heir.] An inheritrix; a woman that inherits.

An heiress she, while yet alive;

All that was her's to him did give. Waller.

Aeneas, though he married the heiress of the crown, yet claimed no title to it during the life of his father-in-law. Dryden.

HE'IRLESS. adj. [from heir.] Without an heir; wanting one to inherit after him.

I still think of

The wrong I did myself; which was so much,

That heirless it hath made my kingdom. Shakef.

HE'IRSHIP. n. f. [from heir.] The state, character, or privileges of an heir.

A layman appoints an heir or an executor in his will, to build an hospital within a year, under pain of being deprived of his heirship. Ayliffe's Parergon.

HEIRLOOM. n. f. [heir and geloma, goods, Saxon.] Any furniture or moveable decreed to descend by inheritance, and therefore inseparable from the freehold.

Achilles' sceptre was of wood,

Transmitted to the hero's line;

Thence through a long descent of kings

Came an heirloom, as Homer sings. Swift.

HELD. The preterite and part. pass. of hold.

A rich man beginning to fall, is held up of friends. Ecclef.

If Minerva had not appeared and held his hand,

he had executed his design. Dryden.

HELIACAL. adj. [heliague, French, from heli and cal.] Emerging from the lustre of the sun, or falling into it.

Had they ascribed the heat of the season to this star, they would not have computed from its heliacal

ascent. Brown.

HE'LIACALLY. adv. [from heliacal.]

From the rising of this star, not cosmically, that is, with the sun, but heliacally, that is, at its emer-sion from the rays of the sun, the ancients computed their canicular days. Brown.

He is tempestuous in the Summer, when he rises heliacally, and rainy in the Winter, when he rises achronically. Dryden.

HE'LIICAL. adv. [helice, French, from heli and cal.] Spiral; with many circumvolutions.

The screw is a kind of wedge, multiplied or continued by a helical revolution about a cylinder, receiving its motion not from any stroke, but from a vector at one end of it. Wilkins.

HEL

HE'LIOD Parabola, in mathematicks, or the parabolick spiral, is a curve which arises from the supposition of the axis of the common Apollonian parabola's being bent round into the periphery of a circle, and is a line then passing through the extremities of the ordinates, which do now converge towards the centre of the said circle. Harris.

HELIOCE'NTRICK. adj. [heliocentrique, Fr. heli and centrique.]

The heliocentrick place of a planet is said to be such as it would appear to us from the sun, if our eye were fixed in its centre. Harris.

HE'LIOSCOPE. n. f. [helioscope, Fr. heli and scope.] A sort of telescope fitted so as to look on the body of the sun, without offence to the eyes. Harris.

HE'LIOTROPE. n. f. [heli and trope; heliotrope, French; heliotropium, Latin.] A plant that turns towards the sun; but more particularly the turnsol, or sunflower.

'Tis an observation of flatterers, that they are like the heliotrope; they open only towards the sun, but shut and contract themselves at night, and in cloudy weather. Government of the Tongue.

HE'LIOSPHERICAL. adj. [helix and sphere.]

The heliospherical line is the rhomb line in navigation, and is so called because on the globe it winds round the pole spirally, and still comes nearer and nearer to it, but cannot terminate in it. Harris.

HELIX. n. f. [helice, French; heli and z.] Part of a spiral line; a circumvolution.

Find the true inclination of the screw, together with the quantity of water which every helix does contain. Wilkins.

HELL. n. f. [helle, Saxon.]

1. The place of the devil and wicked souls.

For it is a knell

That summons thee to heaven or to hell. Shakef.

If a man were a porter of hell gates, he should have old turning the key. Shakef. Macbeth.

Let none admire

That riches grow in hell; that soil may best

Deserve the precious bane. Milton.

Hell's black tyrant trembled to behold

The glorious light he forfeited of old. Cowley.

2. The place of separate souls, whether good or bad.

I will go down to my son mourning to hell. Gen.

He descended into hell. Apostles Creed.

3. Temporal death.

The pains of hell came about me; the snares of death overtook me. Psal. xviii. 4.

4. The place at a running play to which those who are caught are carried.

Then couplea three be straight allotted there;

They of both ends the middle two do fly;

The two that in the mid-place, hell called were,

Must strive with waiting foot and watching eye,

To catch of them, and them to hell to bear,

That they, as well as they, hell may supply. Sidney.

5. The place into which the taylor throws his shreds.

This trusty squire, he had as well

As the bold Trojan knight seen hell;

Not with a counterfeited pass

Of golden bough, but true gold-lace. Madibras.

In Covent-Garden did a taylor dwell,

Who might deserve a place in his own hell. King's Cockney.

6. The infernal powers.

Much danger first, much toil did he sustain,

While Saul and hell cross'd his strong fate in vain. Cowley.

7. It is used in composition by the old writers more than by the modern.

HELL-BLACK. adj. Black as hell.

HEL

The sea, with such a storm as his bare head
In hell-black night endur'd, would have boil'd up,
And quench'd the stelled fires. Shak. King Lear.

HELL-BRED. adj. [hell and bred.] Produced in hell.

Heart cannot think what courage and what cries,

With soul enfolded smok and flashing fire,

The hell-bred beast threw forth into the skies. Spens.

HELL-BROTH. n. f. [hell and broth.] A composition boiled up for infernal purposes.

Adder's fork, and blind worm's sting,

Lizard's leg, and owlet's wing;

For a charm of powerful trouble,

Like a hell-broth boil and bubble. Shakef. Macb.

HELL-DOOMED. adj. [hell and doom.] Consigned to hell.

And reckon'st thou thyself with spirits of heav'n,

Hell-doom'd! and breath'st defiance here and scorn,

Where I reign king? Milton.

HELL-GOVERNED. adj. Directed by hell.

Earth gape open wide and eat him quick,

As thou dost swallow up this good king's blood,

Which his hell-govern'd arm hath butchered. Shak.

HELL-HATED. adj. Abhorred like hell.

Back do I toss these treasons to thy head,

With the hell-hated lie o'erwhelm thy heart. Shak.

HELL-HAUNTED. adj. [hell and haunt.] Haunted by the devil.

Fierce Osmond clos'd me in the bleeding bark,

And bid me stand expos'd to the bleak winds,

Bound to the fate of this hell-haunted grove. Dryd.

HELL-HOUND. n. f. [helle hund, Saxon.]

1. Dog of hell.

From forth this kennel of thy womb hath crept

A hell-bound that doth hunt us all to death. Shakef.

Now the hell-bounds with superior speed

Had reach'd the dame, and, fastening on her side,

The ground with issuing streams of purple dy'd. Dryden.

2. Agent of hell.

I call'd

My hell-bounds to lick up the draff, and filth,

Which man's polluting sin with taint had shed

On what was pure. Milton.

HELL-KITE. n. f. [hell and kite.] Kite of infernal breed. The term hell prefixed to any word notes detestation.

Did you say all? What all? Oh, hell-kite! all?

What, all my pretty chickens, and their dam,

At one fell swoop? Shakef. Macbeth.

HE'LLBORE. n. f. [belleborus, Lat.] Christ-mas flower.

HE'LLBORE Whiter. n. f. [veratrum, Lat.] A plant.

There are great doubts whether any of its species be the true bellebore of the ancients. Miller.

HE'LLENISM. n. f. [hellenismos] A Greek idiom. Ainsworth.

HE'LLISH. adj. [from hell.]

1. Sent from hell; belonging to hell.

O thou celestial or infernal spirit of love, or what other heavenly or hellish title thou list to have, for effects of both I find in myself, have compassion of me. Sidney.

Victory and triumph to the Son of God,

Now entering his great duel, not of arms,

But to vanquish by wisdom hellish wiles. Milton.

2. Having the qualities of hell; infernal; wicked; detestable.

No benefits shall ever ally that diabolical rancour that ferments in some hellish breasts, but that it will foam out at its foul mouth in slander. South.

HE'LLISHLY. adv. [from hellish.] Infernally; wickedly; detestably.

HE'LLISHNESS. n. f. [from hellish.] Wickedness; abhorred qualities.

HE'LLWARD. adv. [from hell.] Toward hell.

Be next thy care the sable sheep to place

Full o'er the pit, and hellward turn their face. Pope.

HELM

HEL

HELM denotes defence: as Eadhelm, happy defence; Sighelm, victorious defence; Berthelm, eminent defence; like Amyntas and Boetius among the Greeks. Gibf. Cam.
HELM. n. s. [helm, Saxon, from belan, to cover, to protect.]

1. A covering for the head in war; a helmet; a morrion; an headpiece.

France spreads his banners in our noiseless land
 With plumed helm the slayer begins his threats.

Shakespeare.

2. The part of a coat of arms that bears the crest.

More might be added of belms, crests, mantles, and supporters.

Camden's Remains.

3. The upper part of the retort.

The vulgar chymists themselves pretend to be able, by repeated cohobations, and other fit operations, to make the distilled parts of a concrete bring its own caput mortuum over the helm.

At the time the deluge came, the earth was loaded with herbage, and thronged with animals. Moorw.

2. The tythe and the right of pasture. Ains.

HE'RBAL. n. f. [from herb.] A book containing the names and description of plants.

We leave the description of plants to herbars, and other like books of natural history. Bacon.

Such a plant will not be found in the herbar of nature. Brown.

As for the medicinal uses of plants, the large herbars are ample testimonies thereof. Mor.

Our

Our herbals are sufficiently stored with plants. Baker.

HERBALIST. n. f. [from herbal.] A man skilled in herbs.
Herbalists have distinguished them, naming that the male whole leaves are herb, and fruit rounder. Brown.

HERBAR. n. f. [A word I believe only to be found in Spenser.] Herb; plant.
The roof hereof was arched over head,
And deck'd with flowers and herbars daintily. Fairy Queen.

HERBARIST. n. f. [herbarius, from herba, Latin.] One skilled in herbs.
Herbarists have exercised a commendable curiosity in subdividing plants of the same denomination. Boyle.

He was too much swayed by the opinions then current among herbarists, that different colours, or multiplicity of leaves in the flower, were sufficient to constitute a specific difference. Ray.

As to the lusi, their seed hath been discovered and shewed me first by an ingenious herbarist. Derham.

HERBELET. n. f. [Diminutive of herb, or of herbula, Latin.] A small herb.
These herbelets, which we upon you strow. Shak.

HERBESCENT. adj. [herbescens, Latin.] Growing into herbs.

HERBID. adj. [herbidus, Latin.] Covered with herbs.

HERBORIST. n. f. [from herb.] One curious in herbs. This seems a mistake for herbarist.
A curious herborist has a plant, whose flower perishes in about an hour. Ray.

HERBOROUGH. n. f. [herberg, German.] Place of temporary residence. Now written harbour.
The German lord, when he went out of Newgate into the cart, took order to have his arms set up in his last herborough. Ben Jonson.

HERBY. adj. [from herb.] Having the nature of herbs.
No substance but earth, and the procedures of earth, as tile and stone, yieldeth any morsel or herby substance. Bacon.

HERD. n. f. [heord, Saxon.]

1. A number of beasts together. It is peculiarly applied to black cattle. Flocks are sheep, and herds oxen or kine.
Note a wild and wanton herd,
Or race of youthful and unhandled colts,
Fetching mad bounds. Shakesp.
There find a herd of heifers, wand'ring o'er
The neighbouring hill, and drive them to the shore. Addison.
2. A company of men, in contempt or detestation.
Survey the world, and where one Cato shines,
Count a degenerate herd of Catlines. Dryden.
I do not remember where ever God delivered his oracles by the multitude, or nature truth by the herd. Locke.
3. It anciently signified a keeper of cattle, and in Scotland it is still used. [hyrd, Saxon.] A sense still retained in composition: as goatherd.

To HERD. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To run in herds or companies.
Weak women should, in danger, herd like deer. Dryden.

It is the nature of indigency, like common danger, to endear men to one another, and make them herd together, like fellow-sailors in a storm. Norris.

2. To associate; to become one of any number or party.
I'll herd among his friends, and seem
One of the number. Addison's Cato.
Run to towns to herd with knaves and fools,
And undistinguish'd pass among the crowd. Walfb.

To HERD. v. a. To throw or put into an herd.
The rest,
However great we are, honest and valiant,
Are herded with the vulgar. Ben Jonson's Catiline.

HERDGROOM. n. f. [herd and groom.] A keeper of herds. Not in use.
But who shall judge the wager won or lost?
That shall yonder herdgroom, and none other. Spenser.

HERDMAN. } n. f. [herd and man.] One HERDSMAN. } employed in tending herds: formerly, an owner of herds.
A herdsman rich, of much account was he,
In whom no evil did reign, or good appear. Sidney.
And you, enchantment,
Worthy enough a herdsman, if e'er thou
These rural latches to his entrance open,
I will devise a cruel death for thee. Shakesp.
Scarce themselves know how to hold
A shephook, or have learn'd ought else the least
That to the faithful herdsman's art belongs. Milton.
There oft the Indian herdsman, shunning heat,
Shelters in cool, and tends his parting herds
At loop-holes cut through thickest shade. Milton.
So stands a Thracian herdsman with his spear
Full in the gap, and hopes the hunted bear. Dryden.
The herdsman, round
The cheerful fire, provoke his health in goblets crown'd. Dryden.
When their herdsman could not agree, they parted
by consent. Locke.

HERE. adv. [her, Saxon; hier, Dutch.]

1. In this place.
Before they here approach,
Old Siward, with ten thousand warlike men,
All ready at a point, was setting forth. Shakesp.
I, upon my frontiers here,
Keep residence. Milton.
Here Nature first begins
Her farthest verge. Milton.
How wretched does Prometheus' state appear,
While he his second mis'ry suffers here. Cowley.
To-day is ours, we have it here. Cowley.
2. In the present state.
Thus shall you be happy here, and more happy hereafter. Bacon.
3. It is used in making an offer or attempt.
Then here's for earnest:
'Tis finish'd. Dryden.
4. In drinking a health.
Here's to thee, Dick. Cowley.
However, friend, here's to the king, one cries;
To him who was the king, the friend replies, Prior.
5. It is often opposed to there; in one place, distinguished from another.
Good-night, mine eyes do itch;
Doth that bode weeping?
—'Tis neither here nor there. Shakesp. Othello.
We are come to see thee fight, to see thee soigne, to see thee traverse, to see thee here, to see thee there. Shakespere.
Then this, then that man's aid, they grave, implore;
Post here for help, seek there their followers. Daniel.
I would have in the heath some thickets made only of sweet-briar and honey-suckle, and some wild vine amongst; and the ground set with violets; for these are sweet, and prosper in the shade; and these to be in the heath here and there, not in order. Bacon.
The devil might perhaps, by inward suggestions, have drawn in here and there a single profelyte. Government of the Tongue.
Your city, after the dreadful fire, was rebuilt, not presently, by raising continued streets; but at first here a house, and there a house, to which others by degrees were joined. Spratt's Sermons.

He that rides post through a country may be able to give some loose description of here a mountain and there a plain, here a morass, and there a river, woodland in one part, and savanas in another. Locke.

6. Here seems, in the following passage, to mean this place.
Bid them farewell, Cordelia, though unkind;
Thou lovest here, a better where to find. Shakesp.

HEREABOUTS. adv. [here and about.] About this place.
I saw hereabouts nothing remarkable, except Au-gustus's bridge. Addison on Italy.

HEREAFTER. adv. [here and after.]

1. In time to come; in futurity.
How worthy he is, I will leave to appear hereafter, rather than story him in his own hearing. Shakesp.
The grand-child, with twelve sons increas'd departs
From Canaan, to a land hereafter called Egypt. Milton.
Hereafter he from war shall come,
And bring his Trojans peace. Dryden.
2. In a future state.
You shall be happy here, and more happy hereafter. Bacon.

HEREAFTER. n. f. A future state. This is a figurative noun, not to be used but in poetry.
'Tis the divinity that stirs within us;
'Tis Heaven itself that points out an hereafter,
And intimates eternity to man. Addison's Cato.
I still shall wait
Some new hereafter, and a future state. Prior.

HEREAT. adv. [here and at.] At this.
One man coming to the tribune, to receive his donative, with a garland in his hand, the tribune, offended hereat, demanded what this singularity could mean? Hooker.

HEREBY. adv. [here and by.] By this.
In what estate the fathers rested, which were dead before, it is not hereby either one way or other determined. Hooker.
Hereby the Moors are not excluded by beauty, there being in this description no consideration of colours. Brown.
The acquisition of truth is of infinite concernment:
hereby we become acquainted with the nature of things. Watts.

HERE'DITABLE. adj. [heres, Latin.] Whatever may be occupied as inheritance.
Adam being neither a monarch, nor his imaginary monarchy hereditabile, the power which is now in the world is not that which was Adam's. Locke.

HEREDITAMENT. n. f. [heredium, Latin.]
A law term denoting inheritance, or hereditary estate.

HERE'DITARY. adj. [hereditaire, French; hereditarius, Latin.] Possessed or claimed by right of inheritance; descending by inheritance.
To thee and thine, hereditary ever,
Remain this ample third of our fair kingdom. Shak.
These old fellows
Have their ingratitude in them hereditary. Shakesp.
He shall ascend
The throne hereditary, and bound his reign With earth's wide bounds, his glory with the heavens. Milton.
Thus while the mute creation downward bend
Their sight, and to their earthly mother tend,
Man looks aloft, and with erected eyes
Beholds his own hereditary skies. Dryden's Ovid.
When heroick verse his youth shall raise,
And form it to hereditary praise. Dryden's Virgil.

HERE'DITARILY. adv. [from hereditary.]
By inheritance.
Here is another, who thinks one of the greatest glories of his father was to have distinguished and loved you, and who loves you hereditarily. Pope.

HEREIN. adv. [here and in.] In this.
How highly soever it may please them with words,
6 C 2

of truth to extol sermons, they shall not heretick offend.
Hooker.

My best endeavours shall be done herein. Shakespeare.
Since truths, absolutely necessary to salvation, are so clearly revealed that we cannot err in them, unless we be notoriously wanting to ourselves, herein the fault of the judgment is resolved into a precedent default in the will. South.

HEREINTO. adv. [here and into.] Into this.

Because the point about which we strive is the quality of our laws, our first entrance hereinto cannot better be made than with consideration of the nature of law in general. Hooker.

HEREOF. adv. [here and of.] From this; of this.

Hereof comes it that prince Harry is valiant. Shakespeare.

HEREO'N. adv. [here and on.] Upon this.
If we should strictly insist hereon, the possibility might fall into question. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

HEREO'UT. adv. [here and out.]

1. Out of this place.
A bird all white, well feather'd on each wing,
Here-out up to the throne of God did fly. Spenser.

2. All the words compounded of here and a preposition, except hereafter, are obsolete, or obsolescent; never used in poetry, and seldom in prose, by elegant writers, though perhaps not unworthy to be retained.

HEREMITICAL. adj. [It should be written eremetical, from eremite, of ἐρημίτης, a desert; beremetique, French.] Solitary; suitable to a hermit.

You describe so well your beremetical state of life, that none of the ancient anchorites could go beyond you for a cave in a rock. Pope.

HE'RESY. n. f. [heresie, French; hæresis, Latin; ἡρέσις.] An opinion of private men different from that of the catholick and orthodox church.

Heresy prevaileth only by a counterfeit shew of reason, whereby notwithstanding it becometh invincible, unless it be convicted of fraud by manifest remonstrance clearly true, and unable to be withstood. Hooker.

As for speculative heresies, they work mightily upon men's wits; yet do not produce great alterations in states. Bacon.

Let the truth of that religion I profess be represented to her judgment, not in the odious disguises of levity, schism, heresy, novelty, cruelty, and disloyalty. King Charles.

HE'RESIARCH. n. f. [heresiarche, French; ἡρεσιάρχης.] A leader in heresy; the head of a herd of hereticks.

The pope declared him not only an heretick, but an heresiarch. Stillington.

HERETICK. n. f. [beretique, French; ἡρετικός.]

1. One who propagates his private opinions in opposition to the catholick church.

These things would be prevented, if no known heretick or schismatick be suffered to go into those countries. Bacon.

No hereticks desire to spread
Their wild opinions like these Epicures. Davies.

Bellarmin owns, that he has quoted a heretick instead of a father. Baker on Learning.

When a Papist uses the word hereticks, he generally means Protestants; when a Protestant uses the word, he means any persons wilfully and contentiously obstinate in fundamental errors. Watts.

2. It is or has been used ludicrously for any one whose opinion is erroneous.

I rather will suspect the sun with cold
Than thee with wantonness; thy honour stands,
In him that was of late an heretick,
As firm as faith. Shakespeare.

HERETICAL. adj. [from heretick.] Containing heresy.

How exclude they us from being any part of the church of Christ under the colour of heresy, when they cannot but grant it possible even for him to be as touching his own personal persuasion, beretical, who, in their opinion, not only is of the church, but holdeth the chiefest place of authority over the same? Hooker.

Constantinople was in an uproar, upon an ignorant jealousy that those words had some beretical meaning. Decay of Piety.

HERETICALLY. adv. [from beretical.] With heresy.

HERETO'. adv. [here and to.] To this; add to this.

HERETOFO'RE. adv. [hereto and fore.] Formerly; anciently.

I have long desired to know you heretofore, with honouring your virtue, though I love not your person. Sidney.

So near is the connection between the civil state and religious, that heretofore you will find the government and the priesthood united in the same person. South.

We now can form no more
Long schemes of life, as heretofore. Swift.

HEREUNTO'. adv. [here and unto.] To this.

They which rightly consider after what sort the heart of man hereunto is framed, must of necessity acknowledge, that whoso assenteth to the words of eternal life, doth it in regard of his authority whose words they are. Hooker.

Agreeable hereunto might not be amiss to make children often to tell a story of any thing they know. Locke.

HEREWITH. adv. [here and with.] With this.

You, fair sir, be not herewith dismay'd,
But constant keep the way in which ye stand. Spens.
Herewith the castle of Hame was suddenly surprised by the Scots. Hayward.

HE'RIOT. n. f. [hepegilb, Saxon.] A fine paid to the lord at the death of a landholder, commonly the best thing in the landholder's possession.

This he detains from the ivy; for he should be the true possessory lord thereof, but the olive dispenseth with his conscience to pass it over with a compliment and an heriot every year. Howel.

Though thou consume but to renew,
Yet love, as lord, doth claim a heriot due. Cleavel.

I took him up, as your heriot, with intention to have made the best of him, and then have brought the whole produce of him in a purse to you. Dryd.

HE'RITABLE. adj. [hæres, Latin.] A person that may inherit whatever may be inherited.

By the canon law this son shall be legitimate and heritable, according to the laws of England. Hale.

HE'RITAGE. n. f. [heritage, French.]

1. Inheritance; estate devolved by succession; estate in general.

Let us our father's heritage divide. Hubbard.

He considers that his proper home and heritage is in another world, and therefore regards the events of this, with the indifference of a guest that tarries but a day. Rogers.

2. [In divinity.] The people of God.

O Lord, save thy people, and bless thine heritage. Common Prayer.

HERMA'PHRODITE. n. f. [hermaphrodite, French, from ἑρμῆς and ἀφροδίτη.] An animal uniting two sexes.

Man and wife make but one right Canonical hermaphrodite. Cleaveland.

Monstrosity could not incapacitate from marriage, witness hermaphrodites. Arbutnot and Pope.

HERMAPHRODITICAL. adj. [from hermaphrodite.] Partaking of both sexes.

There may be equivocal seeds and hermaphroditical principles, that contain the radicality of different forms. Brown.

HERMETICAL. } adj. [from Hermes, or HERMETIC. } Mercury, the imagined inventor of chymistry; bermetique, French.] Chymical.

An Hermetical seal, or to seal any thing hermetically, is to heat the neck of a glass 'till it is just ready to melt, and then with a pair of hot pincers twist it close together. Quincy.

The tube was closed at one end with diachylon, instead of an hermetical seal. Boyle.

HERMETICALLY. adv. [from hermetical.] According to the hermetical or chemick art.

He suffered those things to putrify in hermetically sealed glasses and vessels close covered with paper; and not only so, but in vessels covered with fine lawn, so as to admit the air, and keep out the insects: no living thing was ever produced there. Bentley.

HERMIT. n. f. [hermite, French; contracted from eremite, ἐρημίτης.]

1. A solitary; an anchorite; one who retires from society to contemplation and devotion.

A wither'd hermit, fivescore winters worn,
Might shake off fifty looking in her eye. Shakespeare.

You lay this command upon me, to give you my poor advice for your carriage in so eminent a place: I humbly return you mine opinion, such as an hermit rather than a courtier can render. Bacon.

He had been duke of Savoy, and, after a very glorious reign, took on him the habit of a hermit, and retired into this solitary spot. Addison on Italy.

2. A beadsman; one bound to pray for another. Improper.

For those of old,
And the late dignities heap'd up to them,
We rest your hermits. Shakespeare.

HE'RMITAGE. n. f. [hermitage, French.] The cell or habitation of a hermit.

By that painful way they pass Forth to an hill, that was both steep and high;
On top whereof a sacred chapel was,
And eke a little hermitage thereby. Fairy Queen.
Go with speed

To some forlorn and naked hermitage,
Remote from all the pleasures of the world. Shakespeare.

And may at last my weary age
Find out the peaceful hermitage,
The hairy gown and mossy cell,
Where I may sit and rightly spell
Of ev'ry star that heav'n doth shew,
And ev'ry herb that sips the dew. Milton.

About two leagues from Fribourg we went to see a hermitage: it lies in the prettiest solitude imaginable, among woods and rocks. Addison on Italy.

HE'RMITESS. n. f. [from hermit.] A woman retired to devotion.

HERMITICAL. adj. [from hermit.] Suitable to a hermit.

HE'RMODACTYL. n. f. [ἑρμῆς and δάκτυλος.]

Hermodactyl is a root of a determinate and regular figure, and represents the common figure of a heart cut in two, from half an inch to an inch in length. This drug was first brought into medicinal use by the Arabians, and comes from Egypt and Syria, where the people use them, while fresh, as a vomit or purge; and have a way of roasting them for food, which they eat in order to make themselves fat. The dried roots are a gentle purge, now little used. Hill.

HERN. n. f. [Contracted from HERON, which see.]

Birds that are most easy to be drawn are the mallard, swan, bern, and bittern. Pracham.

HE'RNHILL. n. f. [bern and bill.] An herb. Ainsworth.

HE'RNIA. n. f. [Lat.] Any kind of rupture, diversified by the name of the part affected.

A hernia would certainly succeed. Wifeman.

HE'RO. n. f. [heros, Latin; ἥρως.]

1. A man eminent for bravery.

HER

HET

I sing of heroes and of kings,
In mighty numbers mighty things,
Heroes in animated marble frown.
In this view he ceases to be an hero, and his return is no longer a virtue. Pope's Odyssey.
These are thy honours, not that here thy bust
Is mix'd with heroes, or kings thy dust. Pope.

2. A man of the highest class in any respect; as, a hero in learning.

HEROESS. n. f. [from hero; herois, Lat.] A heroine; a female hero. Not in use.
In which were held, by sad disease,
Heroes and heroesses. Chapman.

HEROICAL. adj. [from hero.] Befitting an hero; noble; illustrious; heroic.
Mufidorus was famous over all Asia for his heroical enterprises. Sidney.
Though you have courage in an heroical degree, I ascribe it to you as your second attribute. Dryd.

HEROICALLY. adv. [from heroical.] After the way of an hero; suitably to an hero.
Not heroically in killing his tyrannical cousin. Sidney.
Free from all meaning, whether good or bad;
And in one word heroically mad. Dryden.

HEROICK. adj. [from hero; heroique, Fr.]
1. Productive of heroes.
Bolingbroke
From John of Gaunt doth bring his pedigree,
Being but the fourth of that heroick line. Shakesp.
2. Noble; suitable to an hero; brave; magnanimous; intrepid; enterprising; illustrious.
Not that which justly gives heroick name
To person, or to poem.
Verse makes heroick virtue live,
But you can life to verses give. Waller.

3. Reciting the acts of heroes. Used of poetry.
Methinks heroick poetry, 'till now,
Like some fantastick fairy land did show. Cowley.
I have chosen the most heroick subject which any poet could desire: I have taken upon me to describe the motives, the beginning, progress and successes of a most just and necessary war. Dryden.
An heroick poem is the greatest work which the soul of man is capable to perform: the design of it is to form the mind to heroick virtue by example. Dryden.

HEROICKLY. adv. [from heroick.] Suitably to an hero. Heroically is more frequent and more analogical.
Samson hath quit himself
Like Samson, and heroickly hath finish'd
A life heroick. Milton.

HEROINE. n. f. [from hero; heroine, Fr.] A female hero. Anciently, according to English analogy, heroess.
But inborn worth, that fortune can controul,
New-strung, and stiffer bent her softer soul;
The heroine assum'd the woman's place,
Confirm'd her mind, and fortify'd her face. Dryd.
Then shall the British stage
More noble characters expose to view,
And draw her finish'd heroines from you. Addison.

HEROISM. n. f. [from heroisme, Fr.] The qualities or character of an hero.
If the Odyssy be less noble than the Iliad, it is more instructive: the Iliad abounds with more heroism, this with more morality. Broome.

HERON. n. f. [from heron, Fr.]
1. A bird that feeds upon fish.
So lords, with sport of flag and heron full,
Sometimes we see small birds from nests do pull. Sidney.
The heron, when she soareth high, sheweth winds. Bacon.

2. It is now commonly pronounced bern.
The tow'ring hawk let future poets sing,
Who terror bears upon his soaring wing;
Let them on high the frighted bern survey,
And lofty numbers paint their airy fray. Gay.

HERONRY. } n. f. [from heron, com-HERONSHAW. } monly pronounced bern- } ry.] A place where herons breed.
They carry their load to a large heronry above three miles. Derham's Physico-Theology.

HERPES. [n. f. ἑρπης,] A cutaneous inflammation of two kinds: miliaris, or pustularis, which is like millet-seed upon the skin; and exedens, which is more corrosive and penetrating, so as to form little ulcers. Quincy.
A farther progress towards acrimony maketh a herpes; and, if the access of acrimony be very great it maketh an herpes exedens. Wifeman's Surgery.

HERRING. n. f. [haring, French; hæring, Saxon.] A small sea fish.
The coast is plentifully stored with round fish, pilchard, herring, mackerel, and cod. Carew.
Buy my herring fresh. Swift.

HERS. pron. The female possessive used when it refers to a substantive going before: as, this is her house, this house is hers. See HER.
How came her eyes so bright? not with salt tears;
If so, my eyes are oftner wash'd than hers. Shak.
Whom ill fate would ruin, it prefers;
For all the miserable are made hers. Waller.
I see her rowling eyes;
And panting, lo! the god, the god, she cries;
With words not hers, and more than human sound,
She makes th' obedient ghosts peep trembling through the ground. Roscommon.

HERSE. n. f. [herse, low Latin; supposed to come from herman, to praise.] This is likewise written berse; see HEARSE.
1. A temporary monument raised over a grave.
2. The carriage in which corpses are drawn to the grave.
When mourning nymphs attend their Daphnia's berse,
Who does not weep that reads the moving verse? Roscom.
On all the line a sudden vengeance waits,
And frequent *herse*s shall besiege your gates. Pope.

TO HERSE. v. a. [from the noun.] To put into an herse.
I would my daughter were dead at my foot, and the jewels in her ear. O, would she were herse'd at my foot, and the ducat in her coffin. Shakesp.
The Grecians spitefully drew from the darts the corse,
And herse'd it bearing it to fleet. Chapman.
The house is herse'd about with a black wood,
Which nods with many a heavy-headed tree. Crashaw.

HERSELF. pronoun.
1. A female individual, as distinguished from others.
The jealous o'er-worn widow and herself,
Since that our brother dubb'd them gentlewomen,
Are mighty gossips in this monarchy. Shakesp.
2. Being in her own power; mistress of her own thoughts.
The more she looks, the more her fears increase,
At nearer sight; and she's herself the less. Dryden.
3. The oblique case of the reciprocal pronoun; as, she hurt herself.
The daughter of Pharaoh came down to wash herself. Exodus.
She returned answer to herself. Judges.

HERSELIKE. adj. [berse and like.] Funeral; suitable to funerals.
Even in the Old Testament, if you listen to David's harp, you shall hear as many herse-like airs as carols. Bacon.

TO HERRY. v. a. [herman, Saxon, to praise, to celebrate.] To hallow; to regard as holy. Now no longer in use.

Thenot, now 'tis the time of merrymake,
Nor Pan to berry, nor with love to play;
Like mirth in May is meetest for to make,
Or summer shade, under the cocked hay. Spenser.
But were thy years green as now be mine,
Then would'st thou learn to carol of love,
And berry with hymns thy last's glove. Spenser.

HE'SITANCY. n. f. [from hesitate.] Dubiousness; uncertainty; suspense.
The reason of my hesitancy about the air is that I forgot to try whether that liquor, which shot into crystals, exposed to the air, would not have done the like in a vessel accurately stopped. Boyle.
Some of them reasoned without doubt or hesitancy, and lived and died in such a manner as to show that they believed their own reasonings. Atterbury.

TO HESITATE. v. a. [hesito, Latin; hesiter, French.] To be doubtful; to delay; to pause; to make difficulty.
A spirit of revenge makes him curse the Grecians in the seventh book, when they hesitate to accept Hector's challenge. Pope.
Willing to wound, and yet afraid to strike,
Just hint a fault, and hesitate dislike;
Alike reserv'd to blame or to commend,
A tim'rous foe, and a suspicious friend. Pope.

HESITATION. n. f. [from hesitate.]
1. Doubt; uncertainty; difficulty made.
I cannot foresee the difficulties and hesitations of every one: they will be more or fewer, according to the capacity of each person. Woodward's Natural History.
2. Intermision of speech; want of volubility.
Many clergymen write in so diminutive a manner, with such frequent blots and interlineations, that they are hardly able to go on without perpetual hesitations. Swift.

HEST. n. f. [hæte, Saxon.] Command; precept; injunction. Obsolete, or written hebest.
Thou dost afflict the not deserver,
As him that doth thy lovely bests despise. Spenser.
Thou wast a spirit too delicate
To act her earthy and abhor'd commands,
Refusing her grand bests. Shakesp.

HETEROCLITE. n. f. [beteroclite, Fr. beteroclitum, Latin; ἑτεροκλίτης and κλίμα.]
1. Such nouns as vary from the common forms of declension, by any redundancy, defect or otherwise. Clarke.
The beteroclite nouns of the Latin should not be touched in the first learning of the rudiments of the tongue. Watts.
2. Any thing or person deviating from the common rule.

HETEROCLITICAL. adj. [from beteroclite.] Deviating from the common rule.
In the mention of fins beteroclitical, and such as want either name or precedent, there is oft times a fin, even in their histories. Brown.

HETERODOX. adj. [beterodoxe, French; ἑτεροδοξία and δοξα.] Deviating from the established opinion; not orthodox.
Partiality may be observed in some to vulgar, in others to beterodox tenets. Locke.

HETERODOX. n. f. An opinion peculiar.
Not only a simple beterodox, but a very hard paradox it will seem, and of great absurdity, if we lay attraction is unjustly appropriated unto the loadstone. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

HETEROGENEAL. adj. [beterogene, Fr. ἑτερογενής and γένος.] Not of the same nature; not kindred.
Let the body adjacent and ambient be not com-material, but merely beterogeneous towards the body that is to be preserved: such are quicksilver and white amber to herbs and flies. Bacon.
The light whose rays are all alike refrangible, I call simple, homogeneous, and similar; and that whose whose rays are some more refrangible than others, I call compound, heterogeneous, and dissimilar.

Newton.

HETEROGENEITY. n. f. [heterogenēitē, French, from heterogeneous.]

1. Opposition of nature; contrariety or dissimilitude of qualities.

2. Opposite or dissimilar part.

Guaiacum, burnt with an open fire in a chimney, is sequestered into ashes and soot; whereas the same wood, distilled into a retort, does yield far other heterogenēities, and is resolved into oil, spirit, vinegar, water and charcoal.

Boyle.

HETEROGENEOUS. adj. [heterogēnos and γένος.] Not kindred; opposite or dissimilar in nature.

I have observed such heterogeneous bodies, which I found included in the mass of this sandstone.

Woodward.

HETEROSCIANS. n. f. [heteroskian and σκία.]

Those whose shadows fall only one way, as the shadows of us who live north of the Tropick fall at noon always to the North.

To HEW. v. a. part. beuwn, or beuwed. [beapan, Saxon; baunwen, Dutch.]

1. To cut by blows with an edged instrument; to hack.

Upon the joint the lucky steel did light,
And made such way that beu'd it quite in twain.

Spenser.

I had purpose
Once more to beu thy target from thy brawn,
Or lose my arm for't.

Shakespeare.

He was beuwn in pieces by Hamilton's friends.

Hayward.

One Vane was so grievously beuwn, that many thousands have died of less than half his hurts, whereof he was cured.

Hayward.

2. To chop; to cut.

He from deep wells with engines water drew,
And us'd his noble hands the wood to beu. Dryd.

3. To cut, as with an axe; with the particles down, when it signifies to fell; up, to excavate from below; off, to separate.

He that depends

Upon your favours, swims with fins of lead,
And beuwn down oaks with rushes.

Shakespeare.

Brave followers, yonder stands the thorny wood,
Which, by the heav'n's assistance and your strength,
Must by the roots be beuwn up yet ere night.

Shakespeare.

Scarce can I speak, my choler is so great:
Oh! I could beu up rocks, and fight with flint.

Shakespeare.

Yet shall the axe of justice beu him down,
And level with the root his lofty crown.

Sandys.

He from the mountain beuwn timber tall,
Began to build a vessel of huge bulk.

Milton.

We'll force the gate where Marcus keeps his guard,
And beu down all that would oppose our passage.

Addison.

4. To form or shape with an axe: with out.

Thou hast beuwn thee out a sepulchre here, as he that beuwn, him out a sepulchre on high. If. xiii.

Nor is it so proper to beu out religious reformations by the sword, as to polish them by fair and equal disputations.

K. Ch.

This river rises in the very heart of the Alps, and has a long valley that seems beuwn out on purpose to give its waters a passage amidst so many rocks.

Addison on Italy.

5. To form laboriously.

The gate was adamant; eternal frame;
Which beu'd by Mars himself, from Indian quarries came,

The labour of a god.

Dryden's Fables.

Next unto bricks are prefer'd the square beuwn stone.

Mort.

I now pass my days, not studious nor idle, rather polishing old works than beuwn our new.

Pope to Swift.

HIB

HEWER. n. f. [from beu.] One whose employment is to cut wood or stone.

At the building of Solomon's temple there were fourscore thousand beuers in the mountains.

Brown.

HEXAGON. n. f. [hexagone, French; ἑξ and γωνία.] A figure of six sides or angles: the most capacious of all the figures that can be added to each other without any interstice; and therefore the cells in honey-combs are of that form.

HEXAGONAL. adj. [from hexagon.] Having six sides or corners.

As for the figures of crystal, it is for the most part hexagonal, or six-cornered.

Brown.

Many of them shoot into regular figures; as crystal and bastard diamonds into hexagonal.

Ray.

HEXAGONY. n. f. [from hexagon.] A figure of six angles.

When I read in St. Ambrose of hexagonies, or sexangular cellars of bees, did I therefore conclude that they were mathematicians?

Bramb.

HEXAMETER. n. f. [ἑξ and μέτρον.] A verse of six feet.

The Latin hexameter has more feet than the English heroick.

Dryden.

HEXANGULAR. adj. [ἑξ and angulus, Lat.] Having six corners.

Hexangular springs or shoots of crystal.

Woodward.

HEXAPOD. n. f. [ἑξ and πόδις.] An animal with six feet.

I take those to have been the hexapods, from which the greater sort of beetles come; for that sort of hexapods are eaten in America.

Ray.

HEXASTICK. n. f. [ἑξ and στίχος.] A poem of six lines.

HEY. interj. [from high.] An expression of joy, or mutual exhortation; the contrary to the Latin hei.

Shadwell from the town retires,
To bless the town with peaceful lyric;
Then hey for praise and panegyrick.

Prior.

HEY'DAY. interj. [for high-day.] An expression of frolick and exultation, and sometimes of wonder.

Thou'lt say anon he is some kin to thee,
Thou spend'st such heyday wit in praising him.

Shakespeare.

'Twas a strange riddle of a lady,
Not love, if any lov'd her, heyday!

Hudibras.

HEY'DAY. n. f. A frolick; wildness.

At your age

The heyday in the blood is tame, it's humble,
And waits upon the judgement.

Shakespeare.

HEYDECIVES. n. f. A wild frolick dance. Obsolete.

But friendly fairies met with many graces,
And light-foot nymphs can chase the ling'ring night
With heydecives, and trimly trodden traces.

Spenser.

HIA'TION. n. f. [from hio, Lat.] The act of gaping.

Men observing the continual hiation, or holding open the camelion's mouth, conceive the intention thereof to receive the aliment of air; but this is also occasioned by the greatness of the lungs.

Brown.

HIA'TUS. n. f. [hiatus, Latin.]

1. An aperture; a gaping breach.

Those hiatus's are at the bottom of the sea, whereby the abyss below opens into and communicates with it.

Woodward.

2. The opening of the mouth by the succession of an initial to a final vowel.

The hiatus should be avoided with more care in poetry than in oratory; and I would try to prevent it, unless where the cutting it off is more prejudicial to the sound than the hiatus itself.

Pope.

HIBERNAL. adj. [hibernus, Lat.] Belonging to the Winter.

This star should rather manifest its warming power in the Winter when it remains conjoined with the sun in its hibernal conversion.

HID

Brown.

HICCIUS DOCCIUS. n. f. [Corrupted, I fancy, from hic est doctus, this, or here is the learned man. Used by jugglers of themselves.] A cant word for a juggler; one that plays fast and loose.

An old dull sot, who told the clock
For many years at Bridewell dock,
At Westminster and Hicks's hall,
And hiccius doccius play'd in all;
Where, in all governments and times,
H' had been both friend and foe to crimes.

Hudib.

HICCOUGH. n. f. [hicken, Danish.] A convulsion of the stomach producing sobs.

So by an abbey's skeleton of late
I heard an echo supererogate
Through imperfection, and the voice restore,
As if she had the hiccough o'er and o'er.

Cleavel.

Sneezing cureth the hiccough, and is profitable unto women in hard labour.

Brown's Vulgar Err.

If the stomach be hurt, singultus or hiccough follows.

Wifeman.

To HICCOUGH. v. n. [from the noun.] To sob with convulsion of the stomach.

To HICUP. v. n. [corrupted from hiccough.] To sob with a convulsed stomach.

Quoth he, to bid me not to love,
Is to forbid my pulse to move,
My beard to grow, my ears to prick up,
Or, when I'm in a fit, to hiccup.

Hudibras.

HICKWALL. } n. f. A bird. Ainsworth.

HICKWAY. } n. f. A bird.

HID. } part. pass. of bid.

Thus fame shall be achiev'd, renown on earth;
And what most merits fame, in silence bid.

Milton.

Other hidden cause

Left them superior.

Milton.

Nature and nature's laws lay bid in night;
God said, Let Newton be, and all was light.

Pope.

His reasons are as two grains of wheat bid in two bushels of chaff.

Shakespeare. Merchant of Venice.

Nile hears him knocking at his sev'nfold gates,
And seeks his hidden spring, and fears his nephews fates.

Dryden.

Thus the fire of gods and men below:
What I have bidden, hope not thou to know.

Dryd.

The sev'ral parts lay bidden in the piece;
Th' occasion but excited that, or this.

Dryd.

Seas bid with navies, chariots passing o'er
The channel, on a bridge from shore to shore.

Dryd.

With what astonishment and veneration may we look into our own souls, where there are such hidden stores of virtue and knowledge, such inexhausted sources of perfection?

Addison.

To HIDE. v. a. preter; bid; part. pass. bid or bidden, [hiban, Saxon.] To conceal to withhold or withdraw from sight or knowledge.

Avaunt, and quit my sight; let the earth hide thee!

Shakespeare.

Then for my corpse a homely grave provide,
Which love and me from publick scorn may hide.

Dryden.

The crafty being makes a much longer voyage than Ulysses, puts in practice many more wiles, and bides himself under a greater variety of shapes.

Addison.

Hell trembles at the sight, and bides its head
In utmost darkness, while on earth each heart
Is fill'd with peace.

Rowe's Royal Convert.

To HIDE. v. n. To lye hid; to be concealed.

A fox, hard run, begged of a countryman to help him to some hiding place.

L'Estrange.

Our bolder talents in full view display'd;
Your virtues open fairest in the shade:

Pope.

Bred to disguise, in publick 'tis you bide,
Where none distinguish 'twixt your shame and pride,

Weakness or delicacy.

Pope.

HIDE and SEEK. n. f. A play in which some hide themselves, and another seeks them.

The

H I D

The boys and girls would venture to come and play at hide and seek in my hair. Gulliver's Trav.

HIDE. n. f. [hýðe, Saxon; bande, Dutch.]

1. The skin of any animal, either raw or dressed.

The trembling weapon pass
Through nine bull bides, each under other plac'd
On his broad shield. Dryden.

Pisistratus was first to grasp their hands,
And spread soft bides upon the yellow sands. Pope.

2. The human skin: in contempt.

Oh, tiger's heart, wrapt in a woman's bide!
How could'st thou drain the life-blood of the child?
Shaksp.

His mantle, now his bide, with rugged hairs
Cleaves to his back; a famished face he bears.
Dryden.

3. A certain quantity of land. [Hide, hyde, French; bida, barbarous Latin, as much as one plough can till.] Ainsworth.

One of the first things was a more particular inquiry than had been before of every bide of land within the precincts of his conquest, and how they were holden. Wotton.

HIDEBOU'ND. adj. [hide and bound.]

1. A horse is said to be hidebound when his skin sticks so hard to his ribs and back, that you cannot with your hand pull up or loosen the one from the other. It sometimes comes by poverty and bad keeping; at other times from over-riding, or a surfeit. Farrier's Dict.

2. In trees.] Being in the state in which the bark will not give way to the growth.

A root of a tree may be hidebound, but it will not keep open without somewhat put into it. Bacon.

Like tinted hidebound trees, that just have got Sufficient sap at once to bear and rot. Swift.

3. Harsh; untractable.

And still the harsher and hidebounder
The damsels prove, become the tender. Hudibras.

4. Niggardly; penurious; parsimonious. Ainsworth.

HIDEIOUS. adj. [hideux, Fr.]

1. Horrible; dreadful; shocking.

If he could have turned himself to as many forms as Proteus, every form should have been made hideous. Sidney.

Some monster in thy thoughts,
Too hideous to be shewn. Shaksp. Othello.

I fled, and cry'd out death!
Hell trembled at the hideous name and sigh'd
From all her caves, and back resounded, death. Milton.

Her eyes grew stiffen'd, and with sulphur burn;
Her hideous looks and hellish form return;
Her curling snakes with hissings fill the place,
And open all the tories of her face. Dryden.

2. It is commonly used of risible objects: the following use is less authorized.

'Tis torned through the hiatuses at the bottom of the sea with such vehemence, that it justle the sea into the most horrible disorder, making it rage and roar with a most hideous and amazing noise. Woodward's Nat. History.

3. It is used by Spenser in a sense not now retained; detestable

O hideous hanger of dominion! Spenser.

HIDEOUSLY. adv. [from hideous.] Horribly; dreadfully; in a manner that shocks.

I aim myself

To welcome the condition of the time;
Which cannot look more hideously on me,
Than I have drawn it in my fantasy. Shakspere.

This in the present application, is hideously profane; but the sense is intelligible. Collier's Defence.

HIDEOUSNESS. n. f. [from hideous.] Horribleness; dreadfulness: terror.

HIDER. n. f. [from the verb.] He that hides.

H I E

To HIE. v. n. [híegan, Saxon.]

1. To hasten; to go in haste.

When they had mark'd the changed skies,
They wait their hour was spent; then each to rest him bies. Fairy Queen.

My will is even this,
That presently you bie you home to bed. Shaksp.

Well, I will bie,
And so bestow these papers as you bade me. Shak.

Some to the shores do fly,
Some to the woods, or whither fear advis'd;
But running from, all to destruction bie. Daniel.

The snake no sooner hiss,
But virtue hear'd it, and away she by'd. Crasbow.

Thither, full fraught with mischievous revenge,
Accurs'd, and in a curst hour, he bies. Milton.

Thus he advis'd me, on yon aged tree
Hang up thy lute, and bie thee to the sea. Waller.

The youth, returning to his mistress, bies. Dryd.

2. It was anciently used with or without the reciprocal pronoun. It is now almost obsolete in all its uses.

Auster spy'd him;
Cruel Auster thither by'd him. Crasbow.

HIERARCH. n. f. [híerach and híerach; hierarchie, Fr.] The chief of a sacred order.

Angels, by imperial summons call'd,
Forthwith from all the ends of heav'n appear'd,
Under their hierarchs in orders bright. Milton.

HIERARCHICAL. adj. [hierarchique, Fr.] Belonging to sacred or ecclesiastical government.

HIERARCHY. n. f. [hierarchie, French.]

1. A sacred government; rank or subordination of holy beings.

Out of the hierarchies of angels sheen,
The gentle Gabriel call'd he from the rest. Faifax.

He rounds the air, and breaks the hymnick notes
In birds, heav'n's choirs, organick throats;
Which, if they did not die, might seem to be
A tenth rank in the heavenly hierarchy. Donne.

Jehovah, from the summit of the sky,
Envoy'd with his winged hierarchy,
The world survey'd. Sandys.

These the supreme king
Exalted to such pow'r, and gave to rule,
Each in his hierarchy, the orders bright. Milton.

The blessedest of mortal wights, now questionless
The highest saint in the celestial hierarchy, began to be so importuned, that a great part of the divine liturgy was address'd solely to her. Howel.

2. Ecclesiastical establishment.

The presbytery had more sympathy with the discipline of Scotland than the hierarchy of England. Bacon.

While the old Levitical hierarch continued, it was part of the ministerial office to slay the sacrifices. South.

Consider what I have written, from regard for the church established under the hierarch of bishops. Swift.

HIEROGLYPH. n. f. [hieroglyphe, French; hieroglyph, English.]

HIEROGLYPHICK. n. f. [hieroglyphique, French; hieroglyphick, English.]

sacred, and hieroglyph, to carve.]

1. An emblem; a figure by which a word was implied. Hieroglyphicks were used before the alphabet was invented. Hieroglyph seems to be the proper substantive, and hieroglyphick the adjective.

This hieroglyphick of the Egyptians was erected for parental affection, manifested in the protection of her young ones, when her nest was set on fire. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

A lamp amongst the Egyptians is the hieroglyphick of life. Wilkins's Dædalus.

The first writing man used was only the single pictures and gravings of the things they would represent, which way of expression was afterwards called hieroglyphick. Woodward.

Between the statues obelisks were plac'd,
And the learn'd walls with hieroglyphicks grac'd. Pope.

2. The art of writing in picture.

No brute can endure the taste of strong liquor, and

H I G

consequently it is against all the rules of hieroglyph to assign any animals as patrons of punch. Swift.

HIEROGLYPHICAL. adj. [hieroglyphique, French; from the noun.]

1. Charged with hieroglyphical sculpture.

In this place stands a stately hieroglyphical obelisk of Theban marble. Sandys's Travels.

2. Emblematical; expressive of some meaning beyond what immediately appears.

The Egyptian serpent figures time,
And, stripp'd, returns into his prime;
If my affection, thou would'st it win,
First cast thy hieroglyphick skin. Cleaveland.

The original of the conceit was probably hieroglyphical, which after became mythological, and, by a process of tradition, stole into a total verity, which was but partly true in its morality. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

HIEROGLYPHICALLY. adv. [from hieroglyphical.] Emblematically.

Others have spoken emblematically and hieroglyphically as the Egyptians, and the phoenix was the hieroglyphick of the sun. Brown.

HIEROGRAPHY. n. f. [hierographe, French; hieroglyphy, English.]

Holy writing.

HIEROPHANT. n. f. [hierophantes, Greek.] One who teaches rules of religion; a priest.

Herein the wantonness of poets, and the crafts of their heathenish priests and hierophants, abundantly gratified the fancies of the people. Hale.

To HIGGLE. v. n. [of uncertain etymology, probably corrupted from haggle.]

1. To chaffer; to be penurious in a bargain.

In good offices and due retributions we may not be pinching and niggardly: it argues an ignoble mind, where we have wronged, to higgle and dodge in the amends. Hale.

Base thou art;
To higgle thus for a few blows,
To gain thy knight an op'lent spouse. Hudibras.

Why all this higgling with thy friend about such a paltry sum? Does this become the generosity of the noble and rich John Bull. Arbutnot.

2. To go selling provisions from door to door. This seems the original meaning, such provisions being cut into small quantities.

HIGGLEDY-PIGGLEDY. adv. A cant word, corrupted from higgle, which denotes any confused mass, as higglers carry a huddle of provisions together.

HIGGLER. n. f. [from higgle.] One who sells provisions by retail.

HIGH. adj. [heah, Saxon; hoogb, Dutch.]

1. Long upwards; rising above from the surface, or from the centre: opposed to deep, or long downward.

Their Andes, or mountains, were far higher than those with us; whereby the remnants of the generation of men were, in such a particular deluge, saved. Bacon.

The higher parts of the earth being continually spending, and the lower continually gaining, they must of necessity at length come to an equality. Burnet's Theory.

2. Elevated in place; raised aloft: opposed to low.

They that stand high have many blasts to shake them,
And if they fall they dash themselves to pieces. Shak. Richard III.

High o'er their heads a mould'ring rock is plac'd,
That promises a fall, and shakes at ev'ry blast. Dryd.

Reason elevates our thoughts as high as the stars, and leads us through the vast spaces of this mighty fabric; yet it comes far short of the real extent of even corporeal being. Locke.

3. Exalted in nature.

The highest faculty of the soul. Baxter.

4. Elevated

4. Elevated in rank, or condition: as, high priest.

He wooes both high and low, both rich and poor. Shakespeare.

O mortals! blind in fate, who never know
To bear high fortune, or endure the low. Dryden.

5. Exalted in sentiment.

Solomon liv'd at ease, nor aim'd beyond Higher design than to enjoy his state. Milton.

6. Difficult; abstruse.

They meet to hear, and answer such high things. Shakespeare.

7. Boastful; ostentatious.

His forces, after all the high discourses, amounted really but to eighteen hundred foot. Clarendon.

8. Arrogant; proud; lofty.

The governor made himself merry with his high and threatening language, and sent him word he would neither give nor receive quarter. Clarendon.

9. Severe; oppressive.

When there appeareth on either side a high hand, violent prosecution, cunning advantages taken, and combination, then is the virtue of a judge seen. Bacon.

10. Noble; illustrious.

Trust me, I am exceeding weary.
—I had thought weariness durst not have attacked so high blood—it doth me, though it discolours the complexion of my greatness to acknowledge it. Shakespeare.

11. Violent; tempestuous; loud. Applied to the wind.

More ships in calms on a deceitful coast,
Or unseen rocks, than in high storms are lost. Denb.
Spiders cannot weave their nets in a high wind. Duppa.

At length the winds are rais'd, the storm blows high;

Be it your care, my friends, to keep it up
In its full fury. Addison's Cato.

12. Tumultuous; turbulent; ungovernable.

Not only tears
Rain'd at their eyes, but high winds worse within,
Began to rise; high passions, anger,
Mistrust, suspicion, discord, hate, shook sore
Their inward state of mind. Milton.

Can heav'nly minds such high resentment show,
Or exercise their spite in human woe? Dryden.

13. Full; complete: applied to time; now used only in cursory speech.

High time now 'gan it wax for Una fair,
To think of those her captive parents dear. Fairy Q.
Sweet warrior, when shall I have peace with you?
High time it is this war now ended were. Spenser.
It was high time to do so, for it was now certain that forces were already upon their march towards the West. Clarendon.

It was high time for the lords to look about them. Clarendon.

14. Rais'd to any great degree: as high pleasure; high luxury; a high performance; a high colour.

Solomon liv'd at ease, and full
Of honour, wealth, high fare. Milton.
High sauces and spices are fetch'd from the Indies. Baker.

15. Advancing in latitude from the line.

They are forced to take their course either high
to the North, or low to the South. Abbot.

16. At the most perfect state; in the meridian: as, by the sun it is high noon:
whence probably the foregoing expression, high time.

It is yet high day, neither is it time that the cattle should be gathered. Gen. xxix. 7.

17. Far advanced into antiquity.

The nominal observation of the several days of the week is very high, and as old as the ancient Egyptians, who named the same according to the seven planets. Brown.

18. Dear; exorbitant in price.

If they must be good at so high a rate, they know they may be sale at a cheaper. South.

19. Capital; great; opposed to little: as, high treason, in opposition to petty.

HIGH. n. s. High place; elevation; superior region: only used with from and on.

Which when the king of Gods beheld from high,
He sigh'd. Dryden.

On HIGH. Aloft; above; into superior regions.

Wide is the fronting gate, and rais'd on high,
With adamant columns threatens the sky. Dryden.

HIGH is much used in composition with variety of meaning.

HIGH-BLEST. adj. Supremely happy.

The good which we enjoy from heav'n descends;
But that from us ought should ascend to Heav'n,
So prevalent, as to concern the mind
Of God high-bless'd, or to incline his will,
Hard to belief may seem. Milton.

HIGH-BLOWN. Swelled much with wind; much inflated.

I have ventur'd,
Like little wanton boys that swim on bladders,
These many Summers on a sea of glory;
But far beyond my depth: my high-blown pride
At length broke under me, and now has left me,
Weary, and old with service, to the mercy
Of a rude stream, that must for ever hide me. Shak.

HIGH-BORN. Of noble extraction.

Cast round your eyes
Upon the high-born beauties of the court;
There chuse some worthy partner of your heart. Rowe.

HIGH-BUILT. adj.

1. Of lofty structure.
I know him by his stride,
The giant Harapha of Gath; his look his exceptions. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

Opium loseth some of his poisonous quality if it be vapoured out, mingled with spirit of wine. Bacon.

3. It is sometimes used as a sign of the genitive case; as the man, his ground, for the man's ground. It is now rarely thus used, as its use proceeded probably from a false opinion that the s formative of the genitive was his contracted.

Where is this mankind now? who lives to age
Fit to be made Methusalem his page? Donne.

By thy food consort, by thy father's cares,
By young Telemachus his blooming years. Pope.

4. It is sometimes used in opposition to this man's.

Were I king,
I should cut off the nobles for their lands,
Desire his jewels, and this other's house. Shaksp.

5. Anciently before self.
Every of us, each for his self, laboured how to recover him. Sidney.

TO HISS. v. n. [hissen, Dutch.]

1. To utter a noise like that of a serpent and some other animals. It is remarkable that this word cannot be pronounced without making the noise which it signifies.

In the height of this bath to be thrown into the Thames and cooled glowing hot, in that surge, like a horsehoe; think of that; bisping hot. Shaksp.
The merchants shall bis at thee. Exek. xxvii. 36.
See the furies arise:

See the snakes that they rear,
How they bis in their hair. Dryd. Alexander's Feast.

Against the steed he threw
His forceful spear, which, bisping as it flew,
Pierc'd through the yielding planks. Dryden.

2. To condemn at a publick exhibition; which is sometimes done by bisping.

Men shall pursue with merited disgrace;
Hiss, clap their hands, and from his country chase. Sandys.

TO HISS. v. a. [hyscean, Saxon.]

1. To condemn by hissing; to explode.
Every one will bis him out to his disgrace.

Eccles. xxii. 1.
She would so shamefully fail in the last act, that instead of a plaudite, she would deserve to be bisped off the stage. Mme.

I have seen many successions of men, who have shot themselves into the world, some bolting out upon the stage with vast applause, and others bisped off, and quitting it with disgrace. Dryden.

Will you venture your all upon a cause, which would be bisped out of all the courts as ridiculous?
Collier on Duelling.

2. To procure hisses or disgrace.

Thy mother plays, and I Play too; but so disgrac'd a part, whose issue Will bis me to my grave. Shaksp. Winter's Tale.

What's the newest grief?
—That of an hour's age doth bis the speaker,
Each minute teems a new one. Shaksp. Macbeth.

He bis for bis return'd, with forked tongue
To forked tongue. Milton.

2. Censure; expression of contempt used in theatres.

He heard
On all sides, from innumerable tongues,
A dismal universal bis, the sound
Of publick scorn! Milton.

Fierce champion fortitude, that knows no fear
Of bisses, blows, or want, or loss of ears. Pope.

HIST. interj. [Of this word I know not the original: some thought it a corruption of busb, busb it, busht, bis; but I have heard that it is an Irish verb commanding silence.] An exclamation commanding silence.

—Mute silence bis along!
'Tis Philomel will deign a song,
In her sweetest saddest plight,
Smoothing the rugged brow of night. Milton.
Hiss, bis, says another that stood by, away, doctor;
for here's a whole pack of distempers coming. Swift.

HISTORIAN. n. f. [historicus, Latin; historien, French.] A writer of facts and events; a writer of history.

What thanks sufficient, or what recompence
Equal, have I to render thee, divine Historian. Milton.

Our country, which has produced writers of the first figure in every other kind of work, has been very barren in good historians. Addison.

Not added years on years my task could close,
The long historian of my country's woes. Pope.

HISTORICAL. } adj. [historique, French;
HISTORICK. } historicus, Latin.]

1. Containing or giving an account of facts and events.

Because the beginning seemeth abrupt, it needs that you know the occasion of these several adventures; for the method of a poet historical is not such as of an historiographer. Spenser.

In an historical relation we use terms that are most proper and best known. Burnet's Theory.

Here rising bold the patriot's honest face;
There warriors frowning in historick bras. Pope.

2. Suitable or pertaining to history or narrative.

With equal justice and historick care,
Their laws, their toils, their arms with his compare. Prior.

HISTORICALLY. adv. [from historical.]
In the manner of history; by way of narration.

The gospels, which we weekly read, do all historically declare something which our Lord Jesus Christ himself either spoke, did, or suffered in his own person. Hooker.

When that which the word of God doth but deliver historically, we construe as if it were legally meant, and so urge it further than we can prove it was intended, do we not add to the laws of God? Hooker.

After his life has been rather invented than written,
I shall consider him historically as an author,
with regard to those works he has left behind him.
Pope's Essay on Homer.

TO HISTORIFY. v. a. [from history.] To relate; to record in history.

O, muse, historify
Her praise, whose praise to learn your skill hath framed me. Sidney.

The third age they term historicon; that is, such wherein matters have been more truly historified, and therefore may be believed. Brown's Vulg. Err.

HISTORIOGRAPHER. n. f. [isopie and γραφω; historiographie, French.] An historian; a writer of history.

The method of a poet historical is not such as of an historiographer. Spenser.

What poor ideas must strangers conceive of persons famous among us, should they form their notions of them from the writings of those our historiographers. Addison.

I put the journals into a strong box, after the manner of the historiographers of some eastern mountain.
Arbutnot's Hist. of John Bull.

HISTORIOGRAPHY. n. f. [isopie and γραφω.]

The art or employment of an historian.

HISTORY. n. f. [isopie; historia Latin;
histoire, French.]

1. A narration of events and facts delivered with dignity.

Justly Caesar scorns the poet's lays;
It is to history he trusts for praise. Pope.

2. Narration; relation.

The history part lay within a little room.
What histories of toil could I declare?
But still long-weary'd nature wants repair. Pope.

3. The knowledge of facts and events.
History so far as it relates to the affairs of the bible, is necessary to divines. Watts.

HISTORY PIECE. n. f. A picture representing some memorable event.

His works resemble a large history piece, where even the less important figures have some convenient place. Pope.

HISTORIO'NICK. } Latin; historion, Fr.]

Befitting the stage; suitable to a player; becoming buffoon; theatrical.

HISTORIO'NICALLY. adv. [from historionical.]

Theatrically; in the manner of a buffoon.

TO HIT. v. a. [from ictus, Latin, Minshew;
from hitte, Danish; to throw at random, Juvius.]

1. To strike; to touch with a blow.

When I first saw her I was presently stricken;
and I, like a foolish child, that when any thing hits him will strike himself again upon it, would needs look again, as though I would persuade mine eyes that they were deceived. Sidney.

His conscience shall hit him in the teeth, and tell him his sin and folly. South.

2. To touch the mark; not to miss.

Is he a god that ever hies the light?
Or naked he, disguis'd in all untruth?
If he be blind, how hitteth he so right? Sidney.

So hard it is to tremble, and not to err, and to hit the mark with a shaking hand. South.

H I T

3. To attain; to reach; not to fail; used of tentative experiments.

Were I but twenty-one,
Your father's image is to bit in you,
His very air, that I should call you brother,
As I did him. Shakefp.
Search every comment that your care can find,
Some here, some there, may bit the poet's mind.
Roscommon.

Birds learning tunes, and their endeavours to bit the notes right, put it past doubt that they have perception, and retain ideas, and use them for patterns.
Locke.

Here's an opportunity to shew how great a bungler my author is in bitting features.
Atterbury.

4. To suit; to be conformable to.

Hail, divinest melancholy!
Whose faintly visage is too bright
To bit the sense of human sight. Milton.

5. To strike; to catch by the right bait; to touch properly.

There you bit him: St. Dominick loves charity exceedingly; that argument never fails with him.
Dryden.

6. To HIT off. To strike out; to fix or determine luckily.

What prince soever can bit off this great secret, need know no more either for his own safety, or that of the people he governs. Temple.

7. To HIT out. To perform by good luck.

Having the sound of ancient poets ringing in his ears, he mought needs in singing bit out some of their tunes. Spenser.

To HIT, v. n.

1. To clash; to collide.

If bodies be extension alone, how can they move and bit one against another? or what can make distinct surfaces in an uniform extension? Locke.

Bones, teeth, and shells being sustained in the water with metallick corpuscles, and the said corpuscles meeting with and bitting upon those bodies, become conjoined with them. Woodward.

2. To chance luckily; to succeed by accident: not to miss.

Oft expectation fails, and most oft there
Where most it promises; and oft it bits
Where hope is coldest and despair most sits. Shakefp.

3. To succeed; not to miscarry.

The experiment of binding of thoughts would be diversified, and you are to note whether it bits for the most part. Bacon's Nat. History.

But thou bring'st valour too and wit,
Two things that seldom fail to bit. Hudibras.
This may bit, 'tis more than barely possible.

All human race would fain be wits,
And millions miss for one that bits. Swift.

4. To light on.

There is a kind of conveying of effectual and im-printing passages amongst compliments, which is of singular use, if a man can bit upon it. Bacon.

You've bit upon the very string, which touch'd,
Echoes the sound, and jars within my soul;
There lies my grief. Dryden's Spanish Fryar.

It is much, if men were from eternity, that they should not find out the way of writing sooner: sure he was a fortunate man, who, after men had been eternally so dull as not to find it out, had the luck at last to bit upon it. Tillotson.

There's a just medium betwixt eating, too much and too little; and this dame had bit upon it, when the matter was so ordered that the hen brought her every day an egg. L'Estrange.

None of them bit upon the art.
There's but a true and a false prediction in any telling of fortune; and a man that never bits on the right side, cannot be called a bad guesser, but must miss out of design. Bentley.

HIT, n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A stroke.

The king hath laid, that in a dozen passes between you and him, he shall not exceed you three bits.
Shakefp. Hamlet.

So he the fam'd Cilician fencer prais'd
And at each bit with wonder seem amaz'd. Dryden.

H I T

2. A chance; a fortuitous event.

To suppose a watch, by the blind bits of chance, to perform diversity of orderly motions, without the regulation of art, this were the more pardonable absurdity. Granville.

If the rule we judge by be uncertain, it is odds
but we shall judge wrong; and if we should judge right, yet it is not properly skill but chance; not a true judgment, but a lucky bit. South.

Let with more lucky bit than those
That use to make the stars depose. Hudibras.

The fisherman's waiting, and the lucky bit it had in the conclusion, tells us, that honest endeavours will not fail. L'Estrange.

If casual concurrence did the world compose,
And things and bits fortuitous arose,
Then any thing might come from any thing;
For how from chance can constant order spring?
Blackmore.

3. A lucky chance.

Have all his ventures fail'd? What, not one bit?
Shakefppeare.

These bits of words a true poet often finds, without seeking. Dryden.

If at first he minds his bits,
And drinks champagne among the wits,
Five deep he toasts the tow'ring ladies. Prior.

To HATCH, v. n. [hegan, Saxon, or hacher
French. Skinner.] To catch; to move by jerks. I know not where it is used but in the following passage; nor here know well what it means.

Whoe'er offends at some unlucky time
Slides in a verse, or bitches in a rhyme;
Sacred to ridicule his whole life long,
And the sad burthen of some merry song. Pope.

To HITCHEL, v. n. [See HATCHEL.]
To beat or comb flax or hemp.

HITCHEL, n. f. [heckel, German.] The instrument with which flax is beaten or combed.

HITHE, n. f. [hyðe, Saxon.] A small haven to land wares out of vessels or boats:
as Queenbithe, and Lambbithe, now Lambeth.

HITHER, adv. [hiðer, Saxon.]

1. To this place from some other.

Cæsar tempted with the fame
Of this sweet island, never conquered,
And envying the Britons blazed name,
O hideous hunger of dominion! hither came.
Spenser.

Men must endure
Their going hence, even as their coming hither.
Shakefp.

Who brought me hither
Will bring me hence, no other guide I seek. Milton.

2. It is used in opposition: hither and thither, to this place and that.

3. To this end; to this design; to this to-pick of argument: [huc, Latin. Hinc refer exitum.] Not much used.

Hereupon dependeth whatsoever difference there is between the states of saints in glory; hither we refer whatsoever belongeth unto the highest perfection of man, by way of service towards God. Hooker.

Hither belong all those texts which require of us that we should not walk after the flesh, but after the spirit. Tillotson.

HITHER, adj. superl. hithermost. Nearer;
towards this part.

After these,
But on the hither side, a different sort,
From the high neighb'ring hills descended. Milton.

An eternal duration may be shorter or longer upon the hither end, namely that extreme wherein it is finite. Hale.

HITHERMOST, adj. [of hither, adv.] Nearest on this side.

That which is external can be extended to a greater extent, at the hithermost extreme. Hale.

HITHERTO, adv. [from hither.]

H O A

1. Yet; to this time.

Hitherto I have only told the reader what ought not to be the subject of a picture or of a poem. Dryd.

2. In any time till now.

More ample spirit than hitherto was wont,
Here needs me, while the famous ancestries
Of my most dreadful sovereign I recount. Fairy Q.

3. At every time till now.

In this we are not their adversaries, tho' they in the other hitherto have been ours. Hooker.

Hitherto, lords, what your commands impos'd
I have perform'd, as reason was, obeying. Milton.

Hitherto she kept her love conceal'd,
And with those graces every day belied.

The graceful youth. Dryden.

He could not have failed to add the opposition of ill spirits to the good alone: this has hitherto been the practice of the moderns. Dryd. Juvenal.

To correct them, is a work that has hitherto been assumed by the least qualified hands. Swift.

HITHERWARD, } adv. [hyðerpeard, HITHERWARDS, } Saxon.] This way;

towards this place.

Some parcels of their power are forth already,
And only hitherward. Shakefp. Coriolanus.

The king himself in person hath set forth,
Or hitherwards intended speedily. Shakefp.

A puissant and mighty pow'r
Is marching hitherward in proud array. Shakefp.

Look now for no enchanting voice, nor fear
The bait of honey'd words; a rougher tongue Draws hitherward. Milton.

HIVE, n. f. [hyfe, Saxon.]

1. The habitation or artificial receptacle of bees.

So bees with smoke, and doves with noisome stench,
Are from their bives and houses driv'n away. Shak.

So wand'ring bees would perith in the air,
Did not a sound, proportion'd to their ear,
Appease their rage, invite them to the bive. Waller.

Bees have each of them a hole in their bives;
their honey is their own, and every bee minds her own concerns. Addison.

2. The bees inhabiting a hive.

The commons, like an angry bive of bees
That want their leader, scatter up and down. Shak.

3. A company being together.

What modern masons call a lodge, was by antiquity called a bive of free masons; and therefore, when a dissension happens, the going off is to this day called swarming. Swift.

To HIVE, v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To put into hives; to harbour.

Mr. Addison of Oxford has been troublesome to me: after his bees, my latter swarm is scarcely worth hiving. Dryden.

When bees are fully settled, and the cluster at the biggest, bive them. Mortimer's Husbandry.

2. To contain, as in hives; to receive, as to an habitation.

Ambitious now to take excise
Of a more fragrant paradise,
He at Fuscara's sleeve arriv'd,
Where all delicious sweets are biv'd. Cleaveland.

To HIVE, v. n. To take shelter together;
to reside collectively.

He sleeps by day
More than the wild cat: drones bive not with me,
Therefore I part with him. Shakefp.

In summer we wander in a paradisaical scence, among groves and gardens; but at this season we get into warmer houses, and bive together in cities.
Pope's Letters.

HIVER, n. f. [from bive.] One who puts bees in hives.

Let the biver drink a cup of good beer, and wash his hands and face therewith. Mortimer.

HO, } interj. [eho! Latin. A call; a HOA, } sudden exclamation to give no-rice of approach, or any thing else.

What noise there ho? Shakefppeare.

Here dwells my father Jew: ho, who's within?
Shakefppeare.

Stand

H O A

Stand be! speak the word along.
When I cried bea!

Like boys, kings would start forth, and cry,
Your will.
Ho, bea, come forth and see.
Ho, bea, wain, what they ord owns that ragged sheep.

HOAR. adj. [hap, Saxon.]

1. White.

A people,
Whom Ireland sent forthoughs and forests hoar.
Fairfax.

Island of bliss, all assaults
Baffling like thy hoar cliffs the loud sea wave.

2. Grey with age.

It govern'd was and guided evermore
Through wisdom of a matron grave and hoar.
Spenser.

Now swarms the populace, a countless throng;
Youth and hoar age, and man drives man along.
Pope.

3. White with frost.

HOAR-FROST. n. f. [hoar and frost.] The congelations of dew in frosty mornings on the grafs.

When the dew was gone up, behold upon the face of the wilderness there lay a small round thing, as small as the hoar-frost on the ground. Exod. xvi. 14.

In Fahrenheit's thermometer, at thirty-two degrees the water in the air begins to freeze, which is hoar-frost. Arbutnot.

HOARD. n. f. [hord, Saxon.] A store laid up in secret; a hidden stock; a treasure.

I have a venturesome fairy, that shall seek
The squirrel's hoard, and fetch thee thence new nuts. Shakespeare.

They might have even starved, had it not been for this providential reserve, this hoard that was stowed in the strata underneath, and now seasonably disclosed. Woodward.

To HOARD. v. n. To make hoards; to lay up store.

He fear'd not once himself to be in need,
Nor car'd to hoard for those whom he did breed.
Spenser.

Happy always was it for that son,
Whose father for his hoarding went to hell? Shak.

To HOARD. v. a.

1. To lay in hoards; to husband privily;
to store secretly.

The hoarded plague of the gods requite your love?
Shakespeare.

You hoard not health for your own private use,
But on the publick spend the rich produce. Dryden.

You will be unsuccessful, if you give out of a great man, who is remarkable for his frugality for the publick, that he squanders away the nation's money;
but you may safely relate that he hoards it.

Arbutnot's Art of political Lying.
A superfluous abundance tempts us to forget food, when it is hoarded in our treasures, or considered as a safe, independent provision laid up for many years.
Rogers.

2. It is sometimes enforced by the particle up.

I have just occasion to complain of them, who because they understand Chaucer, would hoard him up as misers do their grandam gold, only to look on it themselves, and hinder others from making use of it.
Dryden.

The base wretch who boards up all he can,
Is prais'd, and call'd a careful thrifty man. Dryd.

HOARDER. n. f. [from hoard.] One that stores up in secret.

Since commodities will be raised, this alteration will be an advantage to nobody but hoarders of money. Locke.

HOARHOUND. n. f. [marrubium, Latin.]
A plant.

Hoarhound has its leaves and flower-cup covered very thick with a white hoariness: it is famous for the relief it gives in moist asthmas, of which a thick

H O B

and viscous matter is the cause; but it is now little used. Hill.

HOARINESS. n. f. [from hoary.] The state of being whitish; the colour of old men's hair.

He grows a wolf, his hoariness remains,
And the same rage in other members reigns. Dryd.

HOARSE. adj. [har, Saxon; beersib, Dutch.] Having the voice rough, as with a cold; having a rough sound.

Come, sit, sit, and a song,
— Clap into't roundly, without hawking or spitting, or saying we are hoarse. Shakespeare.

The raven himself is hoarse,
That croaks the fatal entrance of Duncan
Under my battlements. Shakespeare. Macbeth.

He sped his steps along the hoarse rebounding shore.
Dryden.

The stock-dove only through the forest cooes, Mournfully hoarse. Thomson.

HOARSELY. adv. [from hoarse.] With a rough harsh voice.

The hounds at nearer distance hoarsely bay'd;
The hunter close pursu'd the visionary maid. Dryd.

HOARSENESS. n. f. [from hoarse.] Roughness of voice.

The voice is sometimes interrupted by an hoarse- ness, or viscous phlegm. Holder.

I had a voice in heav'n, ere sulph'rous steam
Had damp'd it to a hoarseness. Dryd. King Arthur.

The want of it in the wind-pipe occasions hoarse- ness in the gullet, and difficulty of swallowing.
Arbutnot on Aliments.

HOARY. adj. [hap, hapund, Saxon. See
HOAR.]

Thus she rested on her arm reclin'd,
The hoary willows waving with the wind. Addison.

2. White or grey with age.

A comely palmer clad in black attire,
Of ripest years, and hairs all hoary grey. Spenser.

Solyman, marvelling at the courage and majesty of the hoary old prince in his so great extremity, dismiss'd him, and sent him again into the city.
Knoller's History.

Has then my hoary head deserv'd no better.
Rew.

Then in full age and hoary holiness,
Retire, great preacher, to thy promis'd bliss. Prior.

3. White with frost.

The seasons alter; hoary headed frosts
Fall in the fresh lap of the crimson rose. Shakespeare.

4. Mouldy; mossy; rusty.

There was brought out of the city into the camp very coarse, hoary, moulded bread. Knoller's History.

HO'BNOB. This is probably corrupted from hab nab by a coarse pronunciation. See HAB NAB.

His incensement at this moment is so implacable, that satisfaction can be none, but pangs of death and sepulchre: hobnob is his word; give it, or take it.
Shakespeare.

To HOBBLE. v. n. [to hop, to hobble, to hobble.]

1. To walk lamely or awkwardly upon one leg more than the other; to hitch; to walk with unequal and incumbered steps.

The friar was hobbling the same way too. Dryden.
Some persons continued a kind of hobbling march on the broken arches, but fell through. Addison.

Was he ever able to walk without leading-strings, without being discovered by his hobbling? Swift.

2. To move roughly or unevenly. Feet being ascribed to verses, whatever is done with feet is likewise ascribed to them.

Those ancient Romans had a sort of extempore poetry, or untuneable hobbling verse. Dryden.

While you Pindarick truths rehearse,
She hobbles in alternate verse. Prior.

HOBBLE. n. f. [from the verb.] Uneven ankward gait.

H O C

One of his heels is higher than the other, which gives him a bobble in his gait. Gulliver's Travels.

HO'BBLER. n. f. [from hobby.]
For twenty bobblers armed, Irishmen so called, because they served on hobbies, he paid six-pence
a-piece per diem. Davies.

sily; awkwardly; with a halting gait.

HO'BBY. n. f. [bobereau, French.]

1. A species of hawk.

They have such a hovering possession of the Valtoline, as an hobby hath over a lark. Bacon.

The people with chop-like trouts at an artificial fly, and dare like larks under the awe of a painted hobby. L'Estrange.

Larks lie dar'd to shun the hobby's flight. Dryd.

2. [Hoppe, Gothick, a horse; bobin, Fr.
a pacing horse.] An Irish or Scottish horse; a pacing horse; a garran. See HOBBLER.

3. A stick on which boys get astride and ride.

Those grave contenders about opinionative trifles look like aged Socrates upon his boy's hobby horse.
Glanville.

As young children, who are try'd in
Go-carts, to keep their steps from sliding,
When members knit, and legs grow stronger,

Make use of such machine no longer;
But leap pro libitu, and scout

On horse call'd hobby, or without. Prior.

No hobby horse, with gorgeous top,
Could with this Rod of Sid compare. Swift.

4. A stupid fellow.

I have studied eight or nine wise words to speak to you, which these hobby horses must not hear.
Shakespeare.

HOBGOBLIN. n. f. [according to Skiuner, for roboblins, from Robin Goodfellow, Hob being the nickname of Robin: but more probably, according to Wallis and Junius, hobgoblins; empusa, because they do not move their feet: whence, says Wallis, came the boys play of fox in the hole, the fox always hopping on one leg.] A

The devil himself, when he look'd upon Job, could not transport that patient good man beyond his temper, or make him quit his hold.

He seiz'd the shining bough with gripping hold,
And rent away with ease the ling'ring gold.

The hand is divided into four fingers bending forwards, and one opposite to them bending backwards, and of greater strength than any of them singly, which we call the thumb, to join with them severally or united, whereby it is fitted to lay hold of objects of any size or quantity.

Yet then, from all my grief, O Lord,
Thy mercy set me free;

Whilst in the confidence of pray'r,
My soul took hold on thee.

We are strangely backward to lay hold of this taste,
this only method of cure.

He kept his hold,
Nor lost 'till beauty was decay'd and old,

And love was by possession pall'd and cold.

HOMILE'TICAL. adj. [ὁμιλητικός.] Social; conversible.

His life was holy, and when he had leisure for retirements, severe: his virtues active chiefly, and homiletical; not those lazy sullen ones of the cloyster. Atterbury.

Ho'MILY. n. f. [homilie, French; ὁμιλία.]

A discourse read to a congregation.

Homilies were a third kind of readings usual in former times; a most commendable institution, as well then to supply the casual, as now the necessary defect of sermons. Hooker.

What tedious homily of love have you wearied your parishioners withal, and never cried, have patience, good people! Shakespeare's As you like it.

If we survey the homilies of the ancient church, we shall discern that, upon festival days, the subject of the homily was constantly the business of the day. Hammond's Fundamentals.

HOMOGE'NEAL. } adj. [homogene, Fr. homogène.]

HOMOGE'NEOUS. } [ὁμογενής.] Having the same nature or principles; suitable to each other.

The means of reduction, by the fire, is but by congregation of homogeneous parts. Bacon.

Ice is a similiary body, and homogeneous concretion, whose material is properly water. Brown's Vul. Er.

An homogeneous mass of one kind is easily distinguishable from any other; gold from iron, sulphur from allum, and so of the rest. Woodward.

The light, whose rays are all alike refrangible, I call simple, homogeneous, and similar: and that, whose rays are some more refrangible than others, I call compound, heterogeneous, and dissimilar. Newton.

HOMOGE'NEALNESS. } n. f. [from homogeneous, or homogeneity.]

HOMOGE'NEOUSNESS. } [ὁμογενεία.] Participation of the same principles or nature; similitude of kind.

The mixtures acquire a greater degree of fluidity and similarity, or homogeneity of parts. Arbutnot.

Upon this supposition of only different diameters, it is impossible to account for the homogeneity or similarity of the secreted liquors. Cbeysne.

Ho'MOGENY. n. f. [ὁμογενία.] Joint nature. Not used.

By the driving back of the principal spirits, which preserve the consistence of the body, their government is dissolved, and every part returneth to his nature or homogeny. Bacon.

2. With chastity; modestly.

Ho'NESTY. n. f. [honesté, Fr. honestas, Lat.] Justice; truth; virtue; purity.

Thou shalt not have thy husband's lands,

—Why, then mine honesty shall be my dower. Sh.

Goodness, as that which makes men prefer their duty and their promise before their passions or their interest, and is properly the object of trust, in our language goes rather by the name of honesty, though what we call an honest man, the Romans called a good man; and honesty, in their language, as well as in French, rather signifies a composition of those qualities which generally acquire honour and esteem. Temple.

HONEY. n. f. [hunig, Saxon; honig, Dutch; honey, honag, German.]

1. A thick, viscous, fluid substance, of a whitish or yellowish colour, sweet to the taste, soluble in water, and becoming vinous on fermentation, inflammable, liquable by a gentle heat, and of a fragrant smell. Of honey, the first and finest kind is virgin honey, not very firm and of a fragrant smell: it is the first produce of the swarm, obtained by draining the combs without pressing. The second is often almost solid, procured by pressure: and the worst is the common yellow honey, extracted by heating the combs, and then pressing them. In the flowers of plants, by certain glands near the basis, in the petals, is secreted a sweet juice, which the bee, by means of its proboscis or trunk, sucks up, and discharges again from the stomach through the moutn into the comb. The honey deposited in the comb, is destined for the young offspring: but in hard seasons the bees are reduced to the necessity of feeding on it themselves. Hill.

So work the honey bees,

Creatures that by a ruling nature teach The art of order to a peopled kingdom. Shakespeare.

Touching his education and first fostering, some affirm, that he was fed by honey bees. Raleigh's Hist.

In ancient time there was a kind of honey, which, either of its own nature, or by art, would grow as hard as sugar, and was not so luscious as ours. Bacon.

6 E 2

When the patient is rich, there's no fear of physicians about him, as thick as wasps to a honey pot. L'Estrange.

Honey is the most elaborate production of the vegetable kind, being a most exquisite vegetable sops, solvent of the bile, balsamick and pectoral: honey contains no inflammable spirit, before it has felt the force of fermentation; for by distillation it affords nothing that will burn in the fire. Arbutnot.

New wine, with honey temper'd milk we bring; Then living waters from the chrysal spring. Pope.

2. Sweetness; lusciousness.

The king hath found Matter against him, that for ever mars The honey of his language. Shakefp.

HOOD, in composition, is derived from the Saxon had, in German heit, in Dutch heid. It denotes quality; character; condition: as, knighthood; childhood; fatherhood. Sometimes it is written after the Dutch, as maidenhead. Sometimes it is taken collectively: as, brotherhood, a confraternity: sisterhood, a company of sisters.

HOOD. n. f. [hob, Saxon, probably from hepob, head.]

While grace is saying, I'll hood mine eyes
Thus with my hat, and sigh, and say, Amen: Shak.

3. To cover.

An hollow crystal pyramid he takes,
In firmamental waters dipt above;
Of it a broad extinguisher he makes,
And hoods the flames that to their quarry strove.
Dryden.

HO'ODMAN Blind. n. f. A play in which the person hooded is to catch another, and tell the name; blindman's buff.

What devil was't,
That thus hath cozen'd you at hoodman blind?
Shakespeare.

To HO'OD-WINK. v. a. [hood and wink.]

1. To blind with something bound over the eyes.

They willingly hood-wink themselves from seeing his faults, he often abused the virtue of courage to defend his soul vice of injustice.
Sidney.

We will bind and hood-wink him so, that he shall suppose he is carried into the leaguer of the adversaries.
Shakespeare.

Then she who hath been hood-wink'd from her birth,
Doth first herself within death's mirror see. Davies.
So have I seen, at Christmas sports, one lost,
And hood-wink'd, for a man embrace a post.
Ben Jonson.

Satan is fain to hood-wink those that start.
Decay of Piety.

Prejudice so dexterously hood-winks men's minds as to keep them in the dark, with a belief that they are more in the light.
Locke.

Must I wed Rodogune?

of all the hoofed, the horse is the most beautiful;
of all the clawed, the lion is the strongest.
Grew.

HOOF-BOUND. adj. [hoof and bound.]

A horse is said to be hoof-bound when he has a pain in the fore-feet, occasioned by the dryness and contraction or narrowness of the horn of the quarters, which straitens the quarters of the heels, and oftentimes makes the horse lame. A hoof-bound horse has a narrow heel, the sides of which come too near one another, inasmuch that the flesh is kept too tight, and has not its natural extent. Farrier's Dict.

HOOK. n. f. [hoce, Saxon; hoek, Dutch.]

1. Any thing bent so as to catch hold; as a shepherd's book and pot books.

This falling not, for that they had not far enough undermined it, they assayed with great books and strong ropes to have pulled it down.
Kneller.

2. The carvated wire on which the bait is hung for fishes, and with which the fish is pierced.

Like unto golden books,
That from the foolish fish their baits do hide. Spenser.
My bended hook shall pierce
Their slimy jaws. Shakespeare.
Thou divine Plato thus of pleasures thought,
They us with books and baits, like fishes, caught.
Denham.

way reducible to the two tables, unless hooked in by tedious consequences. Norris.

HO'OKED. adj. [from hook.] Bent; curved.

Gryps signifies eagle or vulture; from whence the epithet gryps, for an hooked or aquiline nose. Brown.
Now thou threaten'st, with unjust degree,
To seize the prize which I so dearly bought:
Mean match to thine; for still above the rest,
Thy hook'd rapacious hands usurp the best. Dryd.

Caterpillars have claws and feet: the claws are hooked, to take the better hold in climbing from twig to twig, and hanging on the backsides of leaves.
Grew.

HO'OKEDNESS. n. f. [from hooked.] State of being bent like a hook.

HOOKNOSED. adj. [hook and nose.] Having the aquiline nose rising in the middle.

Rome there, Caesar, I came, saw, and overcame.
Shakespeare. Henry IV.

HOOP. n. f. [hoep, Dutch.]

1. Any thing circular by which something else is bound, particularly casks or barrels.

Thou shalt prove a shelter to thy friends,
A hoop of gold to bind thy brothers in,
That the united vessel of their blood
Shall never leak. Shakespeare. Henry IV.

If I knew
What hoop would hold us staunch, from edge to edge
O' th' world, I would pursue it. Shakespeare.

A quarrel, ho, already! what's the matter?
—About a hoop of gold, a paltry ring. Shakespeare.

To view so lewd a town, and to refrain,
What hoops of iron could my spleen contain! Dryd.
And learned Athens to our art must stoop.
Could she behold us tumbling through a hoop. Pope.

2. The

H O P

2. The whalebone with which women extend their petticoats; a farthingale.

At coming in you saw her stoop:
The entry brush'd against her hoop. Swift.
All that hoops are good for is to clean dirty shoes,
and to keep fellows at a distance. Clarissa.

3. Any thing circular.

I have seen at Rome an antique statue of Time, with a wheel or hoop of marble in his hand. Addison.

To Hoop. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To bind or enclose with hoops.

The three hoop'd pot shall have ten hoops, and I will make it felony to drink small beer. Shakespeare.

This my embrace the zodiac. Cleaveland.
That shelly guard, which hoops in the eye, and hides the greater part of it, might occasion his mistake. Grew.

To Hoop. v. n. [from wopgan or wopyan, Gothick; or houpper, French, derived from the Gothick. This word is generally written whoop, which is more proper if we deduce it from the Gothick;
and hoop if we derive it from the French.]
To shout; to make an outcry by way of call or pursuit.

To Hoop. v. a.
1. To drive with a shout.
Dastard nobles

When my wings are on, I can go above a hundred yards at a hop, step, and jump. Addison.

2. A jump on one leg.

3. A place where meaner people dance.

HOP. n. f. [hop, Dutch; lupulus, Latin.]
A plant.

It has a creeping root: the leaves are rough, angular, and conjugated; the stalks climb and twist about whatever is near them; the flowers are male and female on different plants: the male flower consists of a calyx divided into five parts, which surrounds the stamina, but has no petals to the flower: the female plants have their flowers collected into squamose heads, which grow in bunches: from each leafy scale is produced an horned ovary, which becomes a single roundish seed. Miller.

If hop yard or orchard ye mind for to have,
For hop poles and crotchets in lopping to save. Tusser.
The planting of hop yards is profitable for the planters, and consequently for the kingdom. Bacon.

take malt-drink not much hopped. Arbutnot.

HOPE. n. f. [hopa, Saxon; hope, Dutch.]

1. Expectation of some good; an expectation indulged with pleasure.

Hope is that pleasure in in the mind which every one finds in himself, upon the thought of a profitable future enjoyment of a thing, which is apt to delight him. Locke.
There is hope of a tree, if cut down, that it will sprout again. Job, xiv. 7.
When in heav'n she shall his essence see,
This is her sov'reign good and perfect bliss;
Her longing, wishings, hopes, all finish'd be;
Her joys are full, her motions rest in this. Davies.
Sweet hope! kind cheat! fair fallacy! by thee
We are not where or what we be;

But what and where we would be: thus art thou
Our absent presence, and our future now. Craesatw.
Faith is opposed to infidelity, and hops to despair. Taylor.
He fought them both, but wish'd his hap might find,
Eve separate: he wish'd, but not with hope
Of what so seldom chanc'd: when to his wish,
Beyond his hope, Eve separate he spies. Milton.
The Trojan dames
To Pallas' fane in long procession go,
In hopes to reconcile their heav'nly foe. Dryden.
Why not comfort myself with the hope of what may be, as torment myself with the fear on't. L'Estrange.
To encourage our hopes, it gives us the highest assurance of most lasting happiness, in case of obedience. Tillotson.
The deceased really lived like one that had his hope in another life; a life which he hath now entered upon, having exchanged hope for sight, desire for enjoyment. Atterbury.
Young men look rather to the past age than the present, and therefore the future may have some hopes of them. Swift.

2. Confidence in a future event, or in the future conduct of any person.

It is good, being put to death by men, to look for hope from God, to be raised up again by him. 2 Mac. vii. 14.
Blessed is he who is not fallen from his hope in the Lord. Eccles. xiv. 2.

3. That which gives hope; that on which the hopes are fixed, as an agent by which something desired may be effected.

I might see from far some forty truncheoners draw to her succour, which were the hope of the Strand, where she was quarter'd. Shak. Henry VIII.

4. The object of hope.

Thy mother felt more than a mother's pain,
And yet brought forth less than a mother's hope;
To wit, an indigested deform'd lump. Shakespeare.
She was his his care, his hope, and his delight,
Most in his thought, and ever in his sight. Dryden.

HOPE. n. f. Any sloping plain between the ridges of mountains. Ainsworth.

To HOPE. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To live in expectation.

Hope for good success, according to the efficacy of the causes and the instrument; and let the husband-man hope for a good harvest. Taylor.
My muse, by storms long tost,
Is thrown upon your hospitable coast;
And finds more favour by her ill success,
Than she could hope for by her happiness. Dryden.
Who knows what adverse fortune may befall!
Arm well your mind, hope little, and fear all. Dryd.

2. To place confidence in another.

He shall strengthen your heart, all ye that hope in the Lord. Psal. xxxi. 24.

To HOPE. v. a. To expect with desire.

The sun shines hot; and if we use delay,
Cold-biting Winter mars our hop'd for hay. Shak.
So stands the Thracian herdsman with his spear
Full in the gap, and hopes the hunted bear. Dryd.

HOPEFUL. adj. [hope and full.]

1. Full of qualities which produce hope; promising; likely to obtain success; likely to come to maturity; likely to gratify desire, or answer expectation.

Than hopeful and ingenious youth to see? Denham.
They take up a book in their declining years, and grow very hopeful scholars by that time they are threecore. Addison.

2. Full of hope; full of expectation of success. This sense is now almost confined to Scotland, though it is analogical, and found in good writers.

Men

H O P

Men of their own natural inclination hopeful and strongly conceited, whatsoever they took in hand.

Hooker.

I was hopeful the success of your first attempts would encourage you to make trial also of more nice and difficult experiments.

Boyle.

Whatever ills the friendless orphan bears,
Bereav'd of parents in his infant years,
Still must the wrong'd Telemachus sustain,
If hopeful of your aid, he hopes in vain.

Pope.

HO'PEFULLY. adv. [from hopeful.]

1. In such manner as to raise hope; in a promising way.

He left all his female kindred either matched with peers of the realm actually, or hopefully with earl's sons and heirs.

Watson.

Clarendon.

2. With hope; without despair. This sense is rare.

From your promising and generous endeavours we may hopefully expect a considerable enlargement of the history of nature.

Glanville.

HO'PEFULNESS. n. f. [from hopeful.] Promise of good; likelihood to succeed.

Set down beforehand certain signatures of hopefulness, or characters, whereby may be timely described what the child will prove in probability.

Watson.

HO'PELESS. adj. [from hope.]

1. Without hope; without pleasing expectation; despairing.

Are they indifferent, being used as signs of immoderate and hopeless lamentation for the dead?

Hooker.

Alas! I am a woman, friendless, hopeless!

Shakespeare.

He watches with greedy hope to find

His wish, and best advantage, us asunder;

Hopeless to circumvent us join'd, where each

To others speedy aid might lend at need.

Milton.

The fall'n archangel, envious of our state,

And hopeless to prevail by open force,

Seeks hid advantage. Dryden's State of Innocence.

Hopeless of ransom, and condemn'd to lie

In duress, doom'd a ling'ring death to die.

Dryden.

2. Giving no hope; promising nothing pleasing.

The hopeless word of never to return,

Breath'd I against thee upon pain of life.

Shakespeare.

HO'PER. n. f. [from hope.] one that has pleasing expectations.

I except all hoppers, who turn the scale, because the stronger expectation of a good certain salary will outweigh the loss by bad rents.

Swift.

HO'PINGLY. adv. [from hoping.] With hope; with expectation of good.

One sign of despair is the peremptory contempt of the condition which is the ground of hope; the going on not only in terrors and amazement of conscience, but also boldly, hopingly, and confidently in wilful habits of sin.

Hammond.

HO'PPER. n. f. [from hop.] He who hops or jumps on one leg.

Ainsworth.

HO'PPERS. n. f. [commonly called Scotch hoppers.] A kind of play in which the actor hops on one leg.

HO'PPER. n. f. [so called because it is always hopping, or in agitation. It is called in French, for the same reason, tremie or tremue.]

1. The box or open frame of wood into which the corn is put to be ground.

The salt of the lake Asphaltites shooteth into perfect cubes. Sometimes they are pyramidal and plain, like the hopper of a mill.

Grew.

Granivorous birds have the mechanism of a mill: their maw is the hopper which holds and softens the grain, letting it drop by degrees into the stomach.

Arbutnot on Aliments.

Just at the hopper will I stand,

H O R

In my whole life I never saw grist ground,

And mark the clack how justly it will sound. Betterton

2. A basket for carrying feed. Ainsworth.

HO'RAL. adj. [from hora, Latin.] Relating to the hour.

Howe'er reduc'd and plain,

The watch would still a watch remain;

But if the horal orbit ceases,

The whole stands still, or breaks to pieces. Prior.

HO'RARY. adj. [horaire, French; horarius, Latin.]

1. Relating to an hour.

I'll draw a figure that shall tell you

What you perhaps forgot befell you,

By way of horary inspection,

Which some account our worst erection. Hudibras.

In his answer to an horary question, as what hour of the night to set a fox-trap, he has discussed, under the character of Reynard, the manner of surprising all sharpers.

Tatler.

2. Continuing for an hour.

When, from a basket of Summer-fruit, God by Amos foretold the destruction of his people, thereby was declared the propinquity of their desolation, and that their tranquility was of no longer duration than those horary or soon-decaying fruits of Summer.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

HORDE. n. f. A clan; a migratory crew of people. It is applied only to the Tartars.

Of lost mankind, in polish'd slavery sunk,

Drove martial horde on horde with dreadful sweep,

And gave the vanquish'd world another form. Thomson.

HORIZON. n. f. [ὁρίζων.] The line that terminates the view. The horizon is distinguished into sensible and real: the sensible horizon is the circular line which limits the view; the real is that which would bound it, if it could take in the hemisphere. It is falsely pronounced by Shakespeare, horizon.

When the morning sun shall raise his car

Above the border of this horizon,

We'll forward towards Warwick and his mates.

Shakespeare.

She began to cast with herself from what coast this blazing star should first appear, and at what time it must be upon the horizon of Ireland.

Bacon.

In his East the glorious lamp was seen,

Regent of day; and all th' horizon round

Invested with bright rays.

Milton.

The morning lark, the messenger of the day,

Saluted in her song the morning gray:

And soon the sun arose with beams so bright,

That all th' horizon laugh'd to see the joyous fight.

Dryden.

When the sea is worked up in a tempest, so that the horizon on every side is nothing but foaming billows and floating mountains, it is impossible to describe the agreeable horror that rises from such a prospect.

Addison.

HORIZO'NTAL. adj. [horizonta, French, from horizon.]

1. Near the horizon.

As when the sun, new risen,

Looks through the horizontal misty air,

Shorn of his beams; or from behind the moon,

In dim eclipse, disastrous twilight sheds

On half the nations.

Milton.

2. Parallel to the horizon; on a level.

An obelisk erected, and golden figures placed horizontal about it, was brought out of Egypt by Augustus.

Brown.

The problem is reduced to this; what perpendicular height is necessary to place several ranks of rowers in a plane inclined to a horizontal line in a given angle?

Arbutnot on Colours.

HORIZONTALLY. adv. [from horizontal.]

In a direction parallel to the horizon.

As it will not sink into the bottom, so will it neither float above, like lighter bodies; but, being near in weight, lie superficially, or almost horizontally

unto it:

Brown.

H O R

The ambient ether is too liquid and empty to impel them horizontally with celerity.

Bentley.

HORN. n. f. [haur Gothick; horn, Saxon; born, Dutch.]

1. The hard bodies which grow on the heads of some graminivorous quadrupeds, and serve them for weapons.

No beast that hath horns hath upper teeth. Bacon.

Zelus rises through the ground,

Bending the bull's tough neck with pain,

That tosses back his horns in vain.

Addison.

All that process is no more surprising than the eruption of horns in some brutes, or of teeth and beard in men at certain periods of age.

Bentley.

2. An instrument of wind-musick made of horn.

The squire 'gan nigher to approach,

And wind his horn under the castle-wall,

That with the noise it shook as it would fall.

ordinary road of the hornbook and primer.

Locke.

To master John the English maid

A hornbook gives of ginger-bread;

And that the child might learn the better,

As he can name, he eats the letter.

Prior.

HO'RNED. adj. [from horn.] furnished with horns.

As when two rams, stirr'd with ambitious pride,

Fight for the rule of the rich fleeced flock,

Their horned fronts so fierce on either side

Do meet, that, with the terror of the shock,

Astonish'd both stand senseless as a block.

Fairy Q.

Thither all the horned host resorts,

To graze the ranker mead.

Denham.

Thou

Ainsworth.

HO'RNPIPE. n. f. [horn and pipe.] A country dance, commonly danced to a horn.

A lusty tabere,
That to thee many a hornpipe play'd,
Whereto they dauncen each one with his maid.
Spenser.

There many a hornpipe he tun'd to his Phyllis.
Raleigh.

Let all the quicksilver i' the mine
Run to the feet veins, and refine
Your firkhum jerkhum to a dance
Shall fetch the fiddlers out of France,
To wonder at the hornpipes here
Of Nottingham and Derbyshire. Ben Jonson.

Florinda danced the Derbyshire hornpipe in the presence of several friends. Tatler.

HO'RNSTONE. n. f. A kind of blue stone.
Ainsworth.

And saw the ravens with their horny beaks
Food to Elijah bringing even and morn. Milton.

The horny or pellucid coat of the eye doth not lie in the same superficies with the white of the eye, but riseth up above its convexity, and is of an hyperbolic figure. Ray on the Creation.
Rough are her ears, and broad her horny feet.

The pineal gland was encompassed with a kind of horny substance. Addison.

As the serum of the blood is resolvable by a small heat, a greater heat coagulates it so as to turn it horny, like parchment; but when it is thoroughly putrified, it will no longer concrete. Arbutnot.

3. Hard as horn; callous.

Tyrreus, the foster-father of the beast,
Then clench'd a hatchet in his horny fist. Dryden.

the hour; as a clock; a watch; an hourglass.

He'll watch the horologe a double set
If drink rock not his cradle. Shakespeare.

Before the days of Jerome there were horologies, that measured the hours not only by drops of water in glasses, called clepsydra, but also by sand in glasses, called clepsammia. Brown.

HOROMETRY. n. f. [horometrie, French;
ὥρα and μετρέω] The art of measuring hours.

It is no easy wonder how the horometry of antiquity discovered not this artifice. Brown.

HO'ROSCOPE. n. f. [horoscope, French; ὥρα- σκοπῶ.] The configuration of the planets at the hour of birth.

How unlikely is it, that the many almost numberless conjunction of stars, which occur in the progress of a man's life, should not match and coun-tervail that one horoscope or conjunction which is found at his birth? Drummond.

A proportion of the horoscope unto the seventh house, or opposite sign every seventh year, oppresseth living creatures. Bro.

Him born beneath a boding horoscope,
His fire, the blear-ey'd Vulcan of a shop,
From Mars his forge sent to Minerva's school.
Dryden.

The Greek names this the horoscope;
This governs life, and this marks out our parts,
Our humours, manners, qualities and arts. Creech.

They understood the planets and the zodiack by instinct, and fell to drawing schemes of their own horoscopes in the same dust they sprung out of.
Bentley.

HO'RRENT. adj. [horrens, Latin. Horrentia
pilis agmina.] Pointed outwards; bristled with points; a word perhaps introduced by Milton.

Him a globe
Of fiery seraphim incircled round
With bright emblazonry and horrent arms. Milton.

HORRIBLE. adj. [horrible, French; hor- ribilis, Latin.] Dreadful; terrible; shocking; hideous; enormous.

No colour affecteth the eye much with displeasure:
there be sights that are horrible, because they excite the memory of things that are odious or fearful. Bacon

A dungeon horrible on all sides round,
As one great furnace flamed. Milton.

O sight
Of terror, foul and ugly to behold,
Horrid to think, how horrible to feel! Milton.

Eternal happiness and eternal misery, meeting with a persuasion that the soul is immortal, are, of all other, the first the most desirable, and the latter the most horrible to human apprehension.
South.

1. Terror mixed with detestation; a passion compounded of fear and hate, both strong.

Over them sad horror, with grim hue,
Did always soar, beating his iron wings;

And after him owls and night ravens flew,
The hateful messengers of heavy things. Fairy Queen.

Doubtless all souls have a surviving thought,
Therefore of death we think with quiet mind;

But if we think of being turn'd to nought,
A trembling horror in our souls we find. Davies.

Me damp horror chill'd

At such bold words, vouch'd with a deed so bold.
Milton.

Deep horror seizes ev'ry human breast;

Their pride is humbled, and their fear conlist. Dryd.

2. Dreadful thoughts.

I have sapt full with horrors;
Direness, familiar to my slaught'rous thoughts,
Cannot once start me. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

3. Gloom; dreariness.

Her gloomy presence saddens all the scene,
Shade's ev'ry flow'r, and darkens ev'ry green;

Deepens the murmur of the falling floods,
And breathes a browner horror on the woods. Pope.

4. [In medicine.] Such a shuddering or quivering as precedes an ague-fit; a sense of shuddering or shrinking. Quincy.

All objects of the senses, which are very offensive, do cause the spirits to retire; and, upon their flight, the parts are in some degree destitute, and so there is induced in them a trepidation and horror.
Bacon's Natural History.

HORSE. n. f. [hors, Saxon.]

1. A neighing quadruped, used in war, and draught and carriage.

Duncan's horses, the minions of the race,
Turn'd wild in nature, broke their stalls. Shakesp.

A horse! a horse! my kingdom for a horse! Shak.

We call a little horse, such a one as comes not up to the size of that idea which we have in our minds to belong to ordinarily to horses. Locke.

2. A constellation.

Thy face, bright centaur, Autumn's heats retain,
The softer season suiting to the man;

Whilst Winter's shivering goat afflicts the horse
With frost, and makes him an uneasy course. Creech.

3. To take horse; to set out to ride.

I took horse to the lake of Constance, which is formed by the entry of the Rhine. Addison on Italy.

4. It is used in the plural sense, but with a singular termination; for horses, horsemen, or cavalry.

I did hear
The galloping of horse: who was't came by? Shakesp.

The armies were appointed, consisting of twenty-five thousand horse and foot, for the repulsing of the enemy at their landing. Bacon's War with Spain.

If they had known that all the king's horse were quartered behind them, their foot might very well have marched away with their horse. Clarendon.

Th' Arcadian horse
With ill-success engage the Latin force. Dryd. Æn.

5. Something on which any thing is supported: as, a horse to dry linen on.

6. A wooden machine which soldiers ride by way of punishment. It is sometimes called a timber-mare.

7. Joined to another substantive, it signifies something large or coarse: as a horse- face, a face of which the features are large and indelicate.

To HORSE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To mount upon a horse; to furnish with a horse.

He came out with all his clowns, horsed upon such cart-jades, and so furnished, as I thought with myself, if that were thrift, I wist none of my friends ever to thrive. Sidney.

After a great fight there came to the camp of Gonfalso,

Gonsalvo, the great captain, a gentleman proudly horsed and armed: Diego de Mendoza asked the great captain, Who's this? Who answered, It is St. Elmo, who never appears but after the storm.
Bacon.

2. To carry one on the back.

3. To ride any thing.

Stalls, bulks, windows
Are smother'd, leads are full'd, and ridges hors'd
With variable complexions; all agreeing
In earnestness to see him.
Shakespeare.

Under Sagittarius are born chariot-racers, horsebreakers, and tamers of wild beasts.
Creech.

HORSECHESNUT. n. f. [horse and chesnut. Esculus.] A tree.

It hath digitated or fingered leaves: the flowers, which consist of five-leaves, are of an anomalous figure, opening with two lips: there are male and female upon the same spike: the female flowers are succeeded by nuts, which grow in green prickly husks. Their whole year's shoot is commonly performed in three weeks time, after which it does no more than increase in bulk, and become more firm; and all the latter part of the Summer is occupied in forming and strengthening the buds for the next year's shoots.
Miller.

The horsechesnut grows into a goodly standard.
Mortimer.

HORSECOURSER. n. f. [house and courser.]

Junius derives it from horse and case, an old Scotch word, which signifies to change; and it should therefore, he thinks, be writ horsecoufer. The word now used in Scotland is horsecouper, to denote a jockey, seller, or rather changer of horses. It may well be derived from course, as he that sells horses may be supposed to course or exercise them.]

1. One that runs horses, or keeps horses for the race.

2. A dealer in horses.

A servant to a horsecourser was thrown off his horse.

1. One skilled in riding.

A skilful horseman, and a huntsman bred.
Dryd.

2. One that serves in wars on horseback.

Encounters between horsemen on the one side, and foot on the other, are seldom with extremity of danger; because as horsemen can hardly break a battle on foot, so men on foot cannot possibly chase horsemen.
Hayward.

In the early times of the Roman commonwealth, a horseman received yearly tria millia aëlis, and a foot soldier, one mille; that is more than sixpence a day to a horseman, and twopence a day to a foot-soldier.
Arbutnot on Coins.

3. A rider; a man on horseback.

With descending show'rs of brimstone fir'd
The wild barbarian in the storm expir'd;
Wrapt in devouring flames the horseman rag'd,
And spurr'd the steed in equal flames engag'd.
A horseman's coat shall hide
Thy taper shape, and comeliness of side.
Prior.

HORSEMANSHIP. n. f. [from horseman.] The art of riding; the art of managing a horse.

He vaulted with such ease into his seat,
As if an angel dropt down from the clouds,
To turn and wind a fiery Pegasus,
And witch the world with noble horsemanship.
Shakespeare.

They please themselves in terms of hunting or horsemanship.
Wotton.

His majesty, to shew his horsemanship, slaughtered two or three of his subjects.

The hostess-ship o' th' day; you're welcome fir. Shakefp.

HO'STILE. adj. [hostilis, Latin.] Adverse; opposite; suitable to an enemy.

He has now at last
Giv'n hostile strokes, and that not in the presence
Of dreaded justice, but on the ministers
That do distribute it. Shakefp.

Fierce Juno's hate,
Added to hostile force, shall urge thy fate. Dryden.

HOSTILITY. n. f. [hostilité, French, from hostile.] The practices of an open enemy; open war; opposition in war.

Neither by treason nor hostility
To seek to put me down and reign thyself. Shakefp.
Hostility being thus suspended with France, preparation was made for war against Scotland. Hayward.

What peace can we return,
But, to our pow'r, hostility and hate,
Untam'd reluctance and revenge? Milton.

We have shew'd ourselves fair, nay, generous adversaries; and have carried on even our hostilities with humanity. Atterbury.

HO'STLER. n. f. [hosteller, from hostel.] One who has the care of horses at an inn.

The cause why they are now to be permitted is want of convenient inns for lodging travellers on horseback, and hostlers to tend their horses by the way. Spenser on Ireland.

HO'STRY. n. f. [corrupted from hostelry.]

A place where the horses of guests are kept.

Swift rivers are with sudden ice constrain'd,
And studded wheels are on its back sustain'd;
An hostry now for waggons, which before Tall ships of burden on its bosom bore. Dryden's Georg.

HOT. adj. [hæt, Saxon; bat, Scottish.]

1. Having the power to excite the sense of heat; contrary to cold; fiery.

What is thy name
—Thou'lt be afraid to hear it.

—No, though thou call'it thyself a hotter name
Than any is in hell. Shakefp. Macbeth.

The great breezes which the motion of the air in great circles, such as are under the girdle of the world, produceth, do refrigerate; and therefore, in those parts, noon is nothing so hot as about nine in the forenoon. Bacon.

Hot and cold were in one body fixt;
And soft with hard, and light with heavy mixt. Dryden.

Black substances do soonest of all others become hot in the sun's light, and burn; which effect may proceed partly from the multitude of refractions in a little room, and partly from easy commotion of so very small corpuscles. Newton.

2. Lustful; lewd.

What hotter hours,
Unregister'd in vulgar fame, you have Luxuriously pick'd out. Shakespeare.

Now the hot blooded gods assist me! remember,
Jove, thou was't a bull for thy Europa. Shakefp.

3. Violent; furious; dangerous.

That of Carthage, where the Spaniards had warning of our coming, was one of the hottest services, and most dangerous assaults that hath been

Ho'TCHPOT. } n. f. [baché en poche,

Ho'TCHPOTCH. } French; or bachée en pot, French, as Camden has it, as being boiled up in a pot; yet the former corruption is now generally used.]

A mingled hash; a mixture; a confused mass.

Such patching maketh Littleton's botchpot of our tongue, and, in effect, brings the same rather to a Babelish confusion than any one entire language.

H O V

Camden's Remains.

A mixture of many disagreeing colours is ever unpleasant to the eye, and a mixture or botchpotch of many tastes is unpleasant to the taste.

Bacon.

Nor limbs, nor bones, nor carcass would remain; But a mash'd heap, a botchpotch of the slain.

Ho'TSPUR. n. f. [hot and spur.]

1. A man violent, passionate, precipitate, and heady.

My nephew's trespass may be well forgot;
It hath the excuse of youth and heat of blood.

1. To cry as a wolf or dog.

Methought a legion of foul fiends
Environ'd me, and howled in mine ears

Such hideous cries, that with the very noise
I trembling wak'd.

If wolves had at thy gate howl'd that stern time,
Thou should'st have said, Go, porter, turn the key.

He found him in a desert land, and in the waste howling wilderness.

As when a sort of wolves infest the night,
With their wild howlings at fair Cynthia's light.

Hard as his native rocks, cold as his sword,
Fierce as the wolves that howl'd around his birth;

He hates the tyrant, and the suppliant scorns.

2. To utter cries in distress.

Therefore I will howl, and cry out for all Moab.

The damned use that word in hell,
Howlings attend it.

To deal in petty bargains.

They must pay a shilling, for changing their piece into silver, to some buckstering fellow who follows that trade. Swift.

To HUDDLE. v. a. [probably from hood.]

1. To dress up close so as not to be discovered; to mobble.

2. To put on carelessly in a hurry.

At twelve she rose with much ado;
Her cloths were huddled on by two. Prior.

Now all in haste they huddle on Their hoods, their cloaks, and get them gone. Swift.

3. To cover up in haste.

4. To perform in a hurry.

I have given much application to this poem: this is not a play huddled up in haste. Dryden.

When continu'd rain

The lab'ring husband in his house restrain,
Let him forecast his work with timely care,
Which else is huddled when the skies are fair. Dryden.

5. To throw together in confusion.

Our adversary huddling several suppositions together, and that in doubtful and general terms, makes a medley and confusion. Locke.

To HUDDLE. v. n. To come in a crowd or hurry.

Glance an eye of pity on his losses,
That have of late so huddled on his back,
Enough to press a royal merchant down. Shak.

Brown answered after his blunt and huddling manner. Bacon.

Thyrus, whose artful strains have oft delay'd
The huddling brook to hear his madrigal,
And sweeten'd every muskrose of the dale. Milton.

Their eyes are more imperfect than others; for they will run against things, and huddling forwards, fall from high places. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

HUDDLE. n. s. [from the verb.] Crowd; tumult; confusion; with obscurity.

That the Aristotelian philosophy is a huddle of words and terms insignificant, has been the censure of the wisest. Glanv.

Your carrying business in a huddle,
Has forc'd our rulers to new model. Hudibras.

Nature doth nothing in a huddle. L'Estrange.

The understanding sees nothing distinctly in things remote, and in a huddle. Locke.

Several merry answers were made to my question, which entertained us 'till bed-time, and filled my mind with a huddle of ideas. Addison.

HUE. n. s. [huepe, Saxon.]

1. Colour; die.

For never in that land
Face of fair lady she before did view,
Or that dread lyon's look her cast in deadly hue. Spenser.

To add another hue unto the rainbow,
Is wasteful and ridiculous excess. Shakespeare's King John.

Flow'rs of all hue, and without thorn the rose. Milton.

To whom the angel, with a smile that glow'd
Celestial rose red, love's proper hue, Answer'd. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Your's is much of the camelion hue,
To change the die with distant view. Dryden.

2. [Hue French.] A clamour; a legal pursuit; an alarm given to the country.

It is commonly joined with cry.

Hue and cry, villain, go! Assist me, knight I am undone: fly, run, hue and cry! villain, I am undone. Shakespeare.

Immediately comes a hue and cry after a gang of thieves, that had taken a purse upon the road. L'Estrange.

If you should hiss, he swears he'll hiss as high;
And like a culprit, join the hue and cry. Addison.

The hue and cry went after Jack, to apprehend him dead or alive, where he could be found.

Arbutnot's John Bull.

HUE'R. n. s. [huer, French, to cry.] One whose business is to call out to others.

They lie hovering upon the coast, and are directed by a balker or huer, who standeth on the cliff-side, and from thence discerneth the course of the pilchard.

Carew's Survey.

HUFF. n. s. [from hove, or hoven, swelled:
he is huffed up by distempers. So in some provinces we still say the bread huffs up, when it begins to beave, or ferment: huff, therefore, may be ferment. To be in a huff is then to be in a ferment, as we now speak.]

1. Swell or sudden anger or arrogance.

Quoth Ralpho, honour's but a word,
To swear by, only in a lord;
In others it is but a huff.

To vapour with instead of proof. Hudibras.

His frowns kept multitudes in awe,

Before the bluster of whole huff.

All hats, as in a storm, flew off. Hudibras.

We have the apprehensions of a change to keep a check upon us in the very huff of our greatness.

L'Estrange.

A Spaniard was wonderfully upon the huff about his extraction. L'Estrange.

No man goes about to ensnare or circumvent another in a passion, to lay trains, and give secret blows in a present huff. South.

2. A wretch swelled with a false opinion of his own value.

As for you, colonel huff-cap, we shall try before a civil magistrate who's the greater plotter. Dryd.

Lewd shallow-brained huffs make Atheism and contempt of religion the sole badge and character of
wit. South.

To HUFF. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To swell; to puff.

In many wild birds the diaphragm may easily be huffed up with air, and blown in at the windpipe. Grew.

2. To hector; to treat with insolence and arrogance, or brutality.

The commissioner at Magdalen college said to Dr.
Hough, You must not presume to huff us. Echard.

To HUFF. v. n. To bluster; to storm; to bounce, to swell with indignation or pride.

A huffing, shining, flatt'ring, cringing coward,
A cankerworm of peace, was rais'd above him.

Orway.

A thief and justice fool and knave,
A huffing officer and slave. Hudibras.

Huffing to cowards, fawning to the brave,
To knaves a fool, to cred'ulous fools a knave.

Roscommon.

This senseless arrogant conceit of theirs made them huff at the doctrine of repentance, as a thing below them. South.

Now what's his end? O charming glory say!
What, a fifth act to crown his huffing play? Dryd.

What a small pittance of reason and truth is mixed with those huffing opinions they are swelled with. Locke.

When Peg received John's message, she huffed and stormed like the devil. Arbutnot's John Bull.

HUFFER. n. s. [from huff.] A blusterer;
a bully.

Nor have I have hazarded my art
To be expos'd i' th' end to suffer,

By such a braggadocio huffer. Hudibras.

HUFFISH. adj. [from huff.] Arrogant;
insolent; hectoring.

HUFFISHLY. adv. [from huffish.] With arrogant petulance; with bullying bluster.

HUFFISHNESS. n. s. Petulance; arrogance;
noisy bluster.

To HUG. v. a. [hegan, Saxon, to hedge, to inclose.]

1. To

HUG

1. To press close in an embrace.

He bewept my fortune,
And bugg'd me in his arms. Shakefp.
What would not he do now to bug the creature that had given him so admirable a serenade!

L'Estrange.
Ev'n in that urn their brazier they confess,
And bug it in their arms, and to their bosom press.
Dryden.

King Xerxes was enamoured upon an oak, which he would bug and kiss. Harvey on Consumptions.

2. To fondle; to treat with tenderness.

I, Under fair pretence of friendly ends,
And well-plac'd words of glozing courtesy,
Baited with reasons not unplaussible,
Win me into the easy hearted man,
And bug him into snares. Milton.
We bug deformities, if they bear our names.
Glasville.

Admire yourself,
And, without rival, bug your darling book.
Roscommon.

Though they know that the flatterer knows the falseness of his own flatteries, yet they love the impostor, and with both arms bug the abuse. South.
Mark with what joy he bugs the dear discovery!
Rowe.

3. To hold fast.

Age makes us most fondly bug and retain the good things of life, when we have the least prospect of enjoying them. Asterbury.

4. To gripe in wrestling.

HUG. n. f. [from the noun.]

1. Close embrace.

Why these close bugs? I owe my shame to him.
Gay.

2. A particular gripe in wrestling, called a Cornish bug.

HUGE. adj. [hoogh, high, Dutch.]

1. Vast; immense.

Let the estate of the people of God, when they were in the house of bondage, and their manner of serving God in a strange land, be compared with that which Canaan and Jerusalem did afford; and who seeth not what huge difference there was between them? Hooker.

This space of earth is so huge, as that it equalleth in greatness not only Asia, Europe, and Africa, but America. Abbot.

2. Very great.

The mountain huge. Milton.
Part, huge of bulk!

Wallowing unwieldy, enormous in their gait,
Tempest the ocean; there leviathan
Hugest of living creatures, in the deep Stretch'd like a promontory, sleeps or swims,
And seems a moving land. Milton.

3. Great even to deformity or terribleness.

The patch is kind enough, but a huge feeder.
Shakespeare.

Through forests huge, and long untravell'd heaths,
With desolation brown he wanders waste. Thomson.

HUGELY. adv. [from huge.]

1. Immensely; enormously.

Who cries out on pride,
That can therein tax any private party?
Doth it not flow as bugely as the sea. Shakefp.

2. Greatly; very much.

I am bugely bent to believe, that whenever you concern yourselves in our affairs, it is for our good.
Swift.

HUGENESS. n. f. [from huge.]

1. Enormous bulk; greatness.

2. Utmost extent. Not in use.

My mistress exceeds in goodness the hugeness of your unworthy thinking. Shakefp.

HUGGERMUGGER. n. f. [corrupted perhaps from huger mocker or hug in the dark. Morcker in Danish is darkness, whence our murky. It is written by Sir Thomas Moore, hoker moker. Höker, in Chaucer, is pee-vish, crossgrained, of which maker may only be a ludicrous reduplication. Hooke is likewise in German a corner, and maky is in English dark. I know not how to determine.] Secrecy; bye-place.

HUM

Now hold in buggermugger in their hand,
And all the rest do rob of floods and land. Hubb. Tale.

But if I can but find them out,
Where e'er th' in buggermugger lurk,
I'll make them rue their handy work. Hudibras.

There's a distinction betwixt what's done openly and bare-faced, and a thing that's done in bugger-mugger, under the seal of secrecy and concealment.

L'Estrange.
Hu'GR. adj. [See HUGE.] Vast; great;
huge. Not in use.

This bugy rock one finger's force apparently will move. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

HUKE. n. f. [haque, Fr.] A cloak.

As we were thus in conference, there came one that seemed to be a messenger, in a rich buke.

Bacon's New Atlantis.
HULK. n. f. [bulcke, Dutch; hulk, Saxon.]

1. The body of a ship.

There's a whole merchant's venture of Bourdeaux stuff in him: you have not seen a bulk better stuffed in the hold. Shakefp.

The custom of giving the colour of the sea to the bulks, sails, and mariners of their fly-boats to keep them from being discovered, came from the Veneti.
Arbutnot.

They Argo's bulk will tax,
And scrape her pitchy sides for wax. Swift.

The footy bulk

Steer'd sluggish on. Thompson.

2. Any thing bulky and unwieldy. This sense is still retained in Scotland; as, a bulk is a fellow.

And Harry Monmouth's brawn, the bulk Sir John,
Is prisoner to your son. Shakespeare.

To HULK. v. n. To exentrate; as, to bulk a hare. Ainsworth.

HULL. n. f. [bulgan, Gothick, to cover.]

1. The husk or integument of any thing; the outer covering: as the hull of a nut covers the shell. [Hula, Scottish.]

2. The body of a ship; the hulk. Hull and bulk are now confounded; but bulk seems originally to have meant not merely the body or hull, but a whole ship of burden, heavy and bulky.

Deep in their bulks our deadly bullets light,
And through the yielding planks a passage find,
Dryden.

So many arts hath the Divine Wisdom put together, only for the hull and tackle of a thinking creature. Grew.

To HULL. v. n. [from the noun.] To float; to drive to and fro upon the water without sails or rudder.

They saw a sight full of piteous strangeness; a ship, or rather the carcase of a ship, or rather some few bones of the carcase, hulling there, part broken, part burned, and part drowned. Sidney.

Will you hoist sail, sir? here lies your way.
—No, good swabber, I am to hull here a little longer.
Shakespeare.

He look'd, and saw the ark hull on the flood.
Milton.

People walking down upon the shore, saw something come hulling towards them. L'Estrange.

HULLY. adj. [from hull.] Siliquose; husky.
Ainsworth.

HULLVER. n. f. Holly.

Save hullver and thorn, thereof sail for to make.
Tusser.

To HUM. v. a. [humelan, Dutch.]

1. To make the noise of bees.

The humming of bees is an unequal buzzing.
Bacon.

An airy nation flew,
Thick as the humming bees that hunt the golden dew
In Summer's heat. Dryden.
So weary bees in little cells repose;

HUM

But if night-robbers lift the well-stor'd hive,
An bumming through their waxy city grows. Dryden.

2. To make an inarticulate and buzzing sound.

I think he'll hear me: yet to bite his lip,
And bum at good Cominius, much unhearts me.
Shakespeare.

Upon my honour, Sir, I heard a bumming,
And that a strange one too, which did awake me.
Shakespeare.

The cloudy messenger turns me his back,
And bums; as who should say, You'll rue. Shakefp.

3. To pause in speaking, and supply the in- terval with an audible emission of breath.

Having pump'd up all his wit,
And bumm'd upon it, thus he writ. Hudibras.

I still acquiesc,
And never bumm'd and haw'd sedition,
Nor snuffled treason. Hudibras.

The man lay bumming and hawing a good while;
but in the end, he gave up himself to the physicians.
L'Estrange.

4. To make a dull heavy noise.

The musical accents of the Indians to us, are but inarticulate bummings; as are ours to their otherwise tuned organs. Glasville.

Still bumming on, their drowsy course they keep,
And lash'd so long, like tops, are lash'd asleep. Pope.

5. To sing low.

Hum half a tune. Pope.

6. To applaud. Approbation was com- monly expressed in public assemblies by a hum, about a century ago.

HUM. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. The noise of bees or insects.

To black Hecate's summon
The shard-born beetle, with his drowsy bums, Hath rung night's yawning peal. Shakefp. Macbeth.

Nor undelightful is the ceaseless bum,
To him who muses through the woods at noon.
Thomson.

2. A low confused noise, as of bustling crowds at a distance.

From camp to camp, thro' the foul womb of night,
The bum of either army still resounds. Shakefp.

Tower'd cities please us then,
And the busy bum of men. Milton.

One theatre there is of vast resort,
Which whilom of requests was call'd the court;
But now the great exchange of news 'tis hight,
And full of bum and buz from noon till night. Dryd.

3. Any low dull noise.

Who sat the nearest, by the words o'ercome,
Slept fast: the distant nodded to the bum. Pope.

4. A pause with an inarticulate sound.

These shrugs, these bums and haws,
When you have said she's goodly, come between.
Ere you can say she's honest. Shak. Winter's Tale.

Your excuses want some grains to make 'em current: bum and ha will not do the business. Dryden.

5. In Hudibras it seems used for ham.

And though his countrymen the Huns,
Did stew their meat between their bums,
And the horses backs, on which they straddle,
And ev'ry man eat up his saddle. Hudibras.

6. An expression of applause.

You hear a bum in the right place. SpeEtator.

HUM. interject. A sound implying doubt and deliberation.

Let not your eyes despise the heaviest sound
That ever yet they heard.

Hum! I guals at it. Shakefp. Macbeth.

See sir Robert—bum!
And never laugh for all my life to come. Pope.

HUMAN. adj. [humanus, Latin; humain, French.]

1. Having the qualities of a man.

It will never be asked whether he be a gentleman-born, but whether he be a human creature? Swift.

2. Belonging to a man.

The king is but a man as I am; the violet smells to him as it doth to me; all his senses have but human conditions. Shakefp.

H U M

For man to tell how human life began
Is hard; for who himself beginning knew? Milton.
Thee, serpent, subtil' st beast of all the field,
I knew, but not with human voice indu'd. Milton.
Intuitive knowledge needs no probation, nor can have any, this being the highest of all human certainty. Locke.

HUMA'NE. adj. [humaine, Fr.] Kind;
civil; benevolent; good-natured.

Love of others, if it be not spent upon a few, doth naturally spread itself towards many, and maketh men become humane and charitable. Bacon.

Envy, malice, covetousness and revenge are abolished; a new race of virtues and graces, more divine, more moral, more humane, are planted in their stead.
Spratt.

HUMA'NELY. adv. [from humane.] Kindly; with good-nature.

If they would yield us the superfluity, while it were wholesome, we might guess they relieved us humanely. Shakespeare.

philologer; a grammarian: a term used in the schools of Scotland.

HUMANITY. n. s. [humanité, Fr. humanitas, Latin.

1. The nature of man.

Look to thyself; reach not beyond humanity.

A rarer spirit never did steer humanity. Shakespeare.
The middle of humanity thou never knewest, but the extremity of both ends. Shakespeare.

To preserve the Hebrew intire and uncorrupt, there hath been used the highest caution humanity could invent. Brown.

2. Human kind; the collective body of mankind.

If he can untie those knots, he is able to teach all humanity, and will do well to oblige mankind by his information. Glanville.

3. Benevolence; tendernefs.

All men ought to maintain peace and the common offices of humanity and friendship in diversity of opinions. Locke.

How few, like thee, enquire the wretched out,
And court the offices of soft humanity?
Like thee reserve their raiment for the naked,
Reach out their bread to feed the crying orphan,
Or mix their pitying tears with those that weep!
Rowe.

4. Philology; grammatical studies. In Scotland, humaniores literæ.

TO HU'MANIZE. v. a. [humaniser, French.]
To soften; to make susceptible of ten-dernefs or benevolence.

Here will I paint the characters of woe,
And here my faithful tears in show'rs shall flow,
To humanize the flints whereon I tread. Wotton.

Was it the business of magick to humanize our natures with compassion, forgiveness, and all the instances of the most extensive charity? Addison.

HU'MANKIND. n. s. [human and kind.]
The race of man; mankind.

Blest with a taste exact, yet unconfin'd;
A knowledge both of books and humankind. Pope.

HU'MANLY. adv. [from human.]

HUMBLE. adj. [humble, Fr. humilis, Lat.]

1. Not proud; modest; not arrogant.

And mighty proud to humble weak does yield.

Spenser.

Now we have shewn our power,
Let us seem humbler after it is done,
Than when it was a-doing. Shakespeare. Coriolanus.

Thy humble servant vows obedience,
And faithful service 'till the point of death. Shakespeare.

We should be as humble in our imperfections and fins, as Christ was in the fulness of the spirit, great wisdom, and perfect life. Taylor's Rule of living body.

You, if an humble husband, may request,
Provide and order all things for the best. Dryden.

Ten thousand trifles light as these,
Nor can my rage nor anger move:

She should be humble who would please;
And she must suffer, who can love. Prior.

2. Low; not high; not great.

Th' example of the heav'nly lark,
Thy fellow-poet, Cowley, mark!

Above the skies let thy proud musick sound,
Thy humble nest build on the ground. Cowley.

Denies what ev'ry wretch obtains of fate,
An humble roof and an obscure retreat. Yalden.

Ah! prince, had'st thou but known the joys which dwell

With humbler fortunes, thou wouldst curse thy royalty! Rowe.

Far humbler titles suit my lost conditions. Smith.

TO HU'MBLE. v. a. [from the adjective.]

1. To make humble; to make submissive; to make to bow down with humility.

Take this purse, thou whom the heav'n's plagues
Have humbled to all strokes. Shakespeare. King Lear.

The executioner
Falls not the axe upon the humbled neck,

But first begs pardon. Shakespeare. As you like it.

Humble yourselves under the mighty hand of God, that he may exalt you. 1 Pet. v. 6.

Hezekiah humbled himself for the pride of his heart. 2 Chron.

Why do I humble thus myself, and suing
For peace, reap nothing but repulse and hate? Milton.

Let the sinner put away the evil of his doings, and humble himself by a speedy and sincere repentance;

Let him return to God, and then let him be assured that God will return to him. Rogers.

2. To crush; to break; to subdue; to mortify.

Yearly injoin'd, some say to undergo
This annual humbling certain number'd days,

To dash their pride and joy, for man seduc'd. Milton.

to see him taken down and humbled in his reputation, who had so far raised himself above us. Addison.

The mistress of the world, the seat of empire,
The nurse of heroes, the delight of gods,

That humbled the proud tyrants of the earth. Addison.

Men that make a kind of insult upon society, ought to be humbled as disturbers of the public tranquillity. Freeholder.

Fortune not much of humbling me can boast;
Though double tax'd how little have I lost! Pope.

3. To make to condescend.

This would not be to condescend to their capacities, when he humbles himself to speak to them, but to lose his design in speaking. Locke.

4. To bring down from an height.

In process of time the highest mountains may be humbled into valleys; and again, the lowest vallies exalted into mountains. Hakewill on Providence.

HU'MBLEBEE. n. s. [humble and bee.] What may be the true etymology of this word

I am in doubt. The humblebee is known to have no sting. The Scotch call a cow without horns an humble cow; so that the word seems to signify inermis, wanting the natural weapons. Dr. Beattie. A buzzing wild bee.

The honeybags steal from the humblebees,
And for night tapers crop their waxy thighs. Shak.

This puts us in mind once again, of the humblebees
and the tinder-boxes. Atterbury.

HU'MBLY. adv. [from humble.]

1. Without pride; with humility; modestly; with timorous modesty.

They were us'd to bend,
To send their smiles before them to Achilles,

To come humbly as they used to creep to holy altars.
Shakespeare.

Here the tam'd Euphrates humbly glides
And there the Rhine submits her swelling tides.

Dryden.

Write him down a slave, who, humbly proud,
With presents begs preferments from the crowd.

Dryden.

In midst of dangers, fears, and death,
Thy goodness I'll adore,
And praise thee for thy mercies past,
And humbly hope for more. Addison.

2. Without height; without elevation.

HU'MDRUM. adj. [from hum drone, or humming drone.] Dull; dronish; stupid.

Shall we, quoth she, stand still, humdrum,
And see stout Bruin all alone,

By numbers basely overthrown? Hudibras.

I was talking with an old humdrum fellow, and, before I had heard his story out, was called away by business. Addison.

TO HUMECT. } v. a. [humectis, Lat.]

TO HUMECTATE. } humectare, French.]

To wet; to moisten.

The Nile and Niger do not only moisten and con-temperate the air by their exhalations, but refresh and humectate the earth by their annual inundations.

Brown.

Her rivers are divided into sluices, to humectate
the bordering soil. Howel's Focal Forest.

The medicaments are of a cool humecting quality, and not too much astringent. Wise's Surgery.

HUMECTATION. n. s. [humectation, Fr.
from humectate.] The act of wetting;

moistening.

Plates of brass, applied to a blow, will keep it down from swelling: the cause is repercussion, without humectation, or entrance of any body.

Bacon's Natural History.

That which is concreted by exsiccatations or expression of humidity, will be resolved by humectation, as earth and clay. Brown.

HU'MERAL. adj. [humeral, French, from humerus, Lat.] Belonging to the shoulder.

The

H U M

The largest crooked needle should be used, with a ligature, in taking up the humeral arteries in amputation. Sharp.

HUMICUBATION. n. f. [humi and cubo, Latin.] The act of lying on the ground. Fasting and sackcloth, and ashes and tears, and humicubations, used to be companions of repentance. Bramhall.

HUMID. adj. [humide, French; humidus, Latin.] Wet; moist; watery.

Iris there, with humid bow,
Waters the odorous banks that blow
Flowers of more mingl'd hue
Than her purpled scarf can shew. Milton.

The queen, recover'd, rears her humid eyes,
And first her husband on the poop espies. Dryden.

If they slip easily, and are of a fit size to be agitated by heat, and the heat is big enough to keep them in agitation, the body is fluid; and if it be apt to stick to things, it is humid. Newton's Opticks.

HUMIDITY. n. f. [humidité, French; from humid.] That quality which we call moisture, or the power of wetting other bodies. It differs very much from fluidity, depending altogether on the congruity of the component particles of any liquor to the pores or surfaces of such particular bodies as it is capable of adhering to. Thus quicksilver is not a moist liquor, in respect to our hands or clothes, and many other things it will not stick to; but it may be called so in reference to gold, tin, or lead, to whose surfaces it will presently adhere. And even water itself that wets almost every thing, and is the great standard of humidity, is not capable of wetting every thing, for it stands and runs easily off in globular drops on the leaves of cabbages and many other plants; and it will not wet the feathers of ducks, swans, and other water-fowl. Quincy.

We'll use this unwholesome humidity, this gross watry pumpkin. Shakespeare.

O blessing-breeding sun ward from the earth,
Rotten humidity: below thy sister's orb Infect the air! Shakespeare's Timon of Athens.

Young animals have more tender fibres, and more humidity, than old animals, which have their juices more exalted and relishing. Arbutnot.

HUMILIATION. n. f. [French.]

1. Descent from greatness; act of humility.

The former was an humiliation of Deity, the latter an humiliation of manhood; for which cause there followed upon the latter an exaltation of that which was humbled; for with power he created the world, but restored it by obedience. Hooker.

Thy humiliation shall exalt
With thee thy manhood also to this throne. Milton.

2. Mortification; external expression of sin and unworthiness.

John fasted poorly, according unto the apparel he wore, that is, of camel's hair; and the doctrine he preached was humiliation and repentance. Brown.

With tears
Wat'ring the ground, and with our sighs the air
Frequenting, sent from hearts contrite, in sign
Of sorrow unseign'd, and humiliation meek. Milton.

3. Abatement of pride.

It may serve for a great lesson of humiliation to mankind, to behold the habits and passions of men trampling over interest, friendship, honour, and their own personal safety, as well as that of their country. Swift.

HUMILITY. n. f. [humilité, French.]

1. Freedom from pride; modesty; not arrogance.

When we make profession of our faith, we stand; when we acknowledge our sins, or seek unto God for favour, we fall down; because the gesture of constancy becometh us best in the one, in the other the behaviour of humility. Hooker.

H U M

I do not know that Englishman alive,
With whom my soul is any jot at odds,
More than the infant that is born to-night;
I thank my God for my humility. Shak. Rich. III.

What the height of a king tempteth to revenge, the humility of a Christian teacheth to forgive. King Charles.

The humility of the style gained them many friends. Clarendon.

There are some that use Humility to serve their pride, and seem Humble upon their way, to be the prouder
At their wish'd journey's end. Denham's Sophy.

It is an easy matter to extol humility in the midst of honour, or to begin a fast after dinner. South.

As high turrets, for their airy steep
Require foundations in proportion deep;
And lofty cedars as far upwards shoot,
As to the nether heavens they drive the root;
So low did her secure foundation lye,
She was not humble, but humility. Dryden.

2. Act of submission.

With these humilities they satisfied the young king, and by their bowing and bending avoided the present storm. Davies.

HUMMER. n. f. [from hum.] That which hums; an applauder. Ainsworth.

HUMORAL. adj. [from humour.] Proceeding from the humours.

This sort of fever is comprehended under continual humoral fevers. Harvey on Consumptions.

HUMORIST. n. f. [humorista, Italian; humoriste, French.]

1. One who conducts himself by his own fancy; one who gratifies his own humour.

The notion of a humorist is one that is greatly pleased, or greatly displeased, with little things; his actions seldom directed by the reason and nature of things. Watts.

This humorist keeps to himself much more than he wants, and gives his superfluities to purchase heaven. Addison.

2. One who has odd conceits.

The wit sinks imperceptibly into an humorist. Spectator.

3. One who has violent and peculiar passions.

By a wise and timeous inquisition the peccant humours and humorists must be discovered and purged, or cut off: mercy, in such a case, in a king, is true cruelty. Bacon to Villiers.

HUMOROUS. adj. [from humour.]

1. Full of grotesque or odd images.

Some of the commentators tell us, that Marfya was a lawyer who had lost his cause; others that this passage alludes to the story of the satire Marfyas, who contended with Apollo, which I think is more humorous. Addison on Italy.

2. Capricious; irregular; without any rule but the present whim.

I am known to be a humorous patrician; said to be something imperfect, in favouring the first complaint; hasty and tinder-like, upon too trivial motion. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

Thou fortune's champion, that do't never fight
But when her humorous ladyship is by,
To teach thee safety. Shaksp. King John.

He's humorous as Winter, and as sudden
As flaws congeal'd in the spring of day. Shaksp. Henry IV.

O, you awake then: come away,
Times be short, are made for play;
The humorous moon too will not stay:
What doth make you thus delay? Ben Jonson.

Vain is his courage, boundless in his mind,
Rough as a storm, and humorous as the wind. Dryden.

He that would learn to pass a just sentence on persons and things, must take heed of a fanciful temper of mind, and an humorous conduct in his affairs. Watts's Logic.

3. Pleasant; jocular.

Thy humorous vein, thy pleasing folly,
Lies all neglected, all forgot;

H U M

And pensive, wav'ring, melancholy,
Thou dread'st and hop'st thou know'st not what. Prior.

HUMOROUSLY. adj. [from humorous.]

1. Merrily; jocosely.
A cabinet of medals Juvenal calls very humorously, concisum argentum in titulos faciesque minutas. Addison.

It has been humorously said, that some have fished the very jakes for papers left there by men of wit. Swift.

2. Capriciously; whimsically.

We resolve by halves, and unadvisedly; we resolve rashly, fillily, or humorously, upon no reasons that will hold. Calamy.

HUMOROUSNESS. n. f. [from humorous.]

1. Fickleness; capricious levity.

2. Jocularly; oddness of conceit.

HUMOURSOME. adj. [from humour.]

1. Peevish; petulant.

2. Odd; humourous. In this sense it is less used.

Our science cannot be much improved by masquerades, where the wit of both sexes is altogether taken up in continuing singular and humoursome disguises. Swift.

HUMOURSOMELY. adv. [from humoursome.]

Peevishly; petulantly.

HUMOUR. n. f. [humeur, Fr. humor, Lat.]

1. Moisture.

The aqueous humour of the eye will not freeze, which is very admirable, seeing it hath the perspicuity and fluidity of common water. Ray on the Creation.

2. The different kind of moisture in man's body, reckoned by the old physicians to be phlegm, blood, choler, and melancholy, which, as they predominated, were supposed to determine the temper of mind.

Believe not these suggestions, which proceed
From anguish of the mind and humours black,
That mingle with thy fancy. Milton.

3. General turn or temper of mind.

As there is no humour to which impudent poverty cannot make itself serviceable; so were there enow of those of desperate ambition, who would build their houses upon others ruin. Sidney.

There came a young lord, led with the humour of youth, which ever thinks that good whose goodness he sees not. Sidney.

King James, as he was a prince of great judgment, so he was a prince of a marvellous pleasant humour: as he was going through Lufen by Greenwich, he asked what town it was? they said Lufen. He asked, a good while after, what town is this we are now in? They said still it was Lufen: then, said the king. I will be king of Lufen. Bacon's Apophthegms.

Examine how your humour is inclin'd,
And which the ruling passion of your mind. Recommon.

They, who were acquainted with him, know his humour to be such, that he would never constrain himself. Dryden.

In cases where it is necessary to make examples, it is the humour of the multitude to forget the crime, and to remember the punishment. Addison.

Good humour only teaches charms to last,
Still makes new conquests, and maintains the past. Pope.

4. Present disposition.

It is the care of kings to be attended
By slaves, that take their humours for a warrant
To break into the blood-house of life. Shakespeare.

Another thought her nobler humour led. Fairfax.

Their humours are not to be won,

But when they are impos'd upon. Hudibras.

Tempt not his heavy hand;

But one submissive word which you let fall,

Will make him in good humour with us all. Dryden.

5. Grotesque imagery; jocularly; merriment.

In conversation humour is more than wit, easiness more than knowledge. Temple.

6. Tendency to disease; morbid disposition.

He denied himself nothing that he had a mind to eat or drink, which gave him a body full of humours, and made his fits of the gout frequent and violent.

The child had a humour which was cured by the waters of Glastonbury.

7. Petulance; peevishness.

Is my friend all perfection, all virtue and discretion? Has he not humours to be endured, as well as kindnesses to be enjoyed?

8. A trick; a practice.

I like not the humour of lying: he hath wronged me in some humours: I should have borne the humour'd letter to her.

9. Caprice; whim; predominant inclination.

In private, men are more bold in their own humours; and in consort, men are more obnoxious to others humours; therefore it is good to take both.

To HU'MOUR. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To gratify; to soothe by compliance.

If I had a suit to master Shallow, I would humour his men; if to his men, I would curry with master Shallow.

If I were Brutus now, and he were Cassius, He should not humour me.

Obedience and subjection were never enjoined by God to humour the passions, lusts and vanities of those who are commanded to obey our governors.

You humour me, when I am sick; Why not when I'm splenetick?

Children are fond of something which strikes their fancy most, and fullen and regardless of every thing else, if they are not humoured in that fancy.

2. To fit; to comply with.

To after age thou shalt be writ the man, That with smooth air could humour best our tongue.

'Tis my part to invent, and the musicians to humour that invention.

Fountainbleau is situated among rocks and woods, that give a fine variety of savage prospects: the king has humoured the genius of the place, and only made use of so much art as is necessary to regulate nature.

HUMP. n. f. [corrupted perhaps from bump. See BUMP.] The protuberance formed by a crooked back.

These defects were mended by matches; the eyes were opened in the next generation, and the bump fell.

HUMPBAC. n. f. [bump and back.] Crooked back; high shoulders.

The chief of the family was born with a bump-back and very high nose,

HUMPBACED. adj. Having a crooked back.

To HUNCH. v. a. [husch, German.]

1. To strike or punch with the fists.

Jack's friends began to bunch and push one another: why don't you go and cut the poor fellow down?

2. [Hocker, a crooked back, German.] To crook the back.

Thy crooked mind within bunch'd out thy back, And wander'd in thy limbs.

HUNCHBACKED. adj. [bunch and back.] Having a crooked back.

His person deformed to the highest degree, flattened, and bunchbacked.

But I more fear Creon!

To take that bunchback'd monster in my arms, Th' execrable of a man.

The second daughter was peevish, haggard, pale, with saucer-eyes, a sharp nose, and bunchbacked.

HUNDRED. adj. humb, and hundred, Saxon; honderd. Dutch.] The number consisting of ten multiplied by ten.

A hundred altars in her temple smoke,
A thousand bleeding hearts her pow'r invoke.

Many thousands had seen the transactions of our Saviour, and many hundred thousands received an account of them from the mouths of those who were eye-witnesses.

1. A company, body, or collection consisting of an hundred.

Very few will take this proposition, that God is pleased with the doing of what he himself commands, for an innate moral principle: whosoever does so, will have reason to think hundreds of propositions innate.

Lands, taken from the enemy, were divided into centuries or hundreds, and distributed amongst the soldiers.

2. A canton or division of a county, perhaps once containing an hundred manors. [Hundredum, low Latin; hundrede, old French.]

Imposts upon merchants do seldom good to the king's revenue; for that that he wins in the hundred, he loseth in the shire.

For justice they had a bench under a tree, where Ket sat, and with him two of every hundred whence their companies had been raised: here complaints were exhibited.

HUNDREDTH. adj. [hundreontegopa, Saxon.] The ordinal of an hundred; the tenth ten times told.

We shall not need to use the hundredth part of that time, which themselves bestow in making inventives.

If this medium is rarer within the sun's body than at its surface, and rarer there than at the hundredth part of an inch from its body, and rarer there than at the orb of Saturn, I see no reason why the increase of density should stop.

HUNG. [The preterite and part. pass. of hang.]

A wife so hung with virtues, such a freight,
What mortal shoulders can support?

A room that is richly adorned, and hung round with a great variety of pictures, strikes the eye at once.

HUNGER. n. f. [hungen, Saxon; honger, Dutch.]

1. Desire of food; the pain felt from fasting.

An uneasy sensation at the stomach for food. When the stomach is empty, and the fibres in their natural tension, they draw up so close as to rub against each other, so as to make that sensation: but when they are distended with food, it is again removed; unless when a person fasteth so long as for want of spirits, or nervous fluid, to have those fibres grow too flaccid to corrugate, and then we say a person has fasted away his stomach.

Thou shalt serve thine enemies in hunger and in thirst.

The sub acid part of the animal spirits, being cast off by the lower nerves upon the coats of the stomach, vellicates the fibres, and thereby produces the sense we call hunger.

Something viscous, fat and oily, remaining in the stomach, destroys the sensation of hunger.

2. Any violent desire.

The immaterial felicities we expect, do naturally suggest the necessity of preparing our appetites and hungers for them, without which heaven can be no heaven to us.

For hunger of my gold I dye.

To HUNGER. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To feel the pain of hunger.

My more having, would be as a sauce

To make me hunger more.

As if they hunger'd for the food they bore.

2. To desire with great eagerness; to long.

Dost thou so hunger for my empty chair,
That thou wilt needs invest thee with my honour,
Before thy hour be ripe? O, foolish youth,

Thou seek'st the greatness that will overwhelm thee!
Stay but a little.

And from the sting of famine fear no harm,
Nor mind it, fed with better thoughts that feed Me hung'ring more to do my Father's will.

HUNGERBIT. } adj. [hunger and bit.]

HUNGERBITTEN. } Pained or weakened with hunger.

His strength shall be hungerbitten.

Bred up in poverty and straits at home;
Loit in a desert here, and hungerbit.

HUNGERLY. adj. [from hunger.] Hungry; in want of nourishment.

His beard
Grew thin and hungerly, and seem'd to ask
His sops as he was drinking.

HUNGERLY. adv. With keen appetite.

You have sav'd my longing, and I feed
Most hungerly on your sight.

They are all but stomachs, and we all but food;
They eat us hungerly, and, when they're full,
They belch us.

HUNGERSTARVED. adj. [hunger and starved.] Starved with hunger; pinched by want of food.

All my followers to th' eager foe
Turn back, and fly like ships before the wind,
Or lambs pursu'd by hungerstarved wolves.

Go, go, cheer up thy hungerstarved men,
As to some holy house th' afflicted came,
Th' hungerstarv'd, the naked, and the lame,

HUNGRED. adj. [from hunger.] Pinched by want of food.

Odours do in a small degree nourish, and we see men an hungred love to smell hot bread.

HUNGRILY. adv. [from hungry.] With keen appetite.

Thus much to the kind rural gods we owe,
Who pity'd suffering mortals long ago;
When on harsh acorns hungrily they fed,
And gave 'em nicer palates, better bread.

HUNGRY. adj. [from hunger.]

1. Feeling pain from want of food.

That face of his the hungry cannibals
Would not have touch'd, would not have stain'd with blood.

By eating before he was hungry, and drinking before he was dry, he was sure never to eat or drink much at a time.

They that talk thus may say that a man is always hungry, but that he does not always feel it; whereas hunger consists in that very sensation.

2. Not fat; not fruitful; not prolific; more disposed to draw from other substances than to impart to them.

Cassius has a lean and hungry look.

The more fat water will bear sop best; for the hungry water doth kill its unctuous nature.

In rushy grounds springs are found at the first and second spit, and sometimes lower in a hungry gravel.

To the great day of retribution our Saviour refers us, for reaping the fruits that we here sow in the most hungry and barren soil.

HUNKS. n. f. [hunsker, sordid, Islandick.]

A covetous sordid wretch; a miser; a curmudgeon.

The old bunks was well served, to be tricked out of a whole hog for the securing of his puddings.

bunks, worth money.

To HUNT. v. a. [huntian, Saxon, from humb, a dog.]

1. To chase wild animals.

The man that once did sell the lion's skin,
While the beast liv'd, was kill'd in hunting him.

While the beast liv'd, was kill'd in hunting him.

H U N

Wilt thou bunt the prey for the lion, or fill the appetite of the young lions? Job. xxxviii. 39.

We should single every criminal out of the herd, and bunt him down, however formidable and overgrown; and, on the contrary, shelter and defend virtue. Addison.

2. To pursue; to follow close.

Evil shall bunt the violent man to overthrow him. Pf. cxl.

The heart strikes five hundred sorts of pulses in an hour, and is bunted unto such continual palpitations, through anxiety, that fain would it break. Harvey on Consumptions.

3. To search for.

Not certainly affirming any thing, but by conferring of times and monuments, I do bunt out a probability. Spenser.

All that is found in books is not rightly deduced from principles: such an examen every reader's mind is not forward to make, especially in those who have given themselves up to a party, and only bunt for what may favour and support the tenets of it. Locke.

4. To direct or manage hounds in the chase.

He bunts a pack of dogs better than any, and is famous for finding hares. Addison.

To HUNT. v. n.

1. To follow the chase.

When he returns from bunting I will not speak with him. Shakespeare's King Lear.
Esau went to the field to bunt for venison. Gen. xxvii. 5.

One followed study and knowledge, and another hawking and bunting. Locke.

On the old pagan tombs, masks, bunting matches, and Bacchanals are very common. Addison on Italy.

2. To pursue or search.

Very much of kin to this is the bunting after arguments to make good one side of a question, and wholly to neglect and refuse those which favour the other side. Locke.

HUNT. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A pack of hounds.

The common bunt, though from their rage restrain'd By sov'reign power, her company disdain'd Grinn'd as they pass'd. Dryden's Hind and Panther.

2. A chase.

The bunt is up, the morn is bright and gray;
The fields are fragrant, and the woods are green. Shakespeare.

3. Pursuit.

I've heard myself proclaim'd;
And by the happy hollow of a tree,
Escap'd the bunt. Shakespeare's King Lear.

HUNTER. n. f. [from hunt.]

1. One who chases animals for pastime or food.

If those English lords had been good hunters, and reduced the mountains, bogs, and woods within the limits of forests, chases, and parks, the forest law would have driven them into the plains, Davies on Ireland.

Down from a hill the beast that reigns in woods,
First hunter then, pursu'd a gentle brace,
Goodliest of all the forest, hart and hind. Milton.

Another's crimes th' unhappy hunter bore,
Glutting his father's eyes with guiltless gore. Dryden's Æn.

This was the arms or device of our old Roman hunters; a passage of Manilius let us know the pagan hunters had Meleager for their patron. Addison.

Bold Nimrod first the savage chase began,
A mighty hunter, and his game was man. Pope.

2. A dog that scents game or beasts of prey.

Of dogs, the valu'd file
Distinguishes the swift, the slow, the subtle,
The housekeeper, the hunter. Shakespeare. Macbeth.

HUNTINGHORN. n. f. [hunting and horn.]

A bugle; a horn used to cheer the hounds.

Whilst a boy, Jack ran from school,
Fond of his huntinghorn and pole. Prior.

HUNTRESS. n. f. [from hunter.] A woman that follows the chase.

And thou thrice crowned queen of night, survey
With thy chaste eye, from thy pale sphere above,

H U R

Thy hunter's name, that my full life doth sway. Shakespeare.

Shall I call

Antiquity from the old schools of Greece,
To testify the arms of chastity?

Heoce had the hunter's Dian her dread bow,
Fair silver-shafted queen, for ever chaste. Milton.

Let old Arcadia boast her ample plain,
Th' immortal hunter's, and her virgin train;

Nor envy Windsor. Pope.

Homer represents Diana with her quiver at her shoulder; but at the same time he describes her as an hunter's. Broome.

HUNTSMAN. n. f. [hunt and man.]

1. One who delights in the chase.

Like as a hunter's, after weary chase,
Seeing the game escape from him away,
Sits down to rest him. Spenser's Sonnets.

Such game, whilst yet the world was new,
The mighty Nimrod did pursue:
What hunter's of our feeble race,
Or dogs, dare such a monster chase? Waller.

2. The servant whose office it is to manage the chase.

Apply this moral rather to the hunter's, that managed the chase, than to the master. L'Estrange.

HUNTSMANSHIP. n. f. [from hunter.]

The qualifications of a hunter.

At court your fellows every day
Give the art of rhiming, *hunter's*ship, or play. Danne.

HURDLE. n. f. [hynbel, Saxon]

Their frail original and faded bliss. Milton.

She strikes the lute; but if it found,
Threatens to hurl it on the ground. Waller.

Corrupted light of knowledge hurl'd
Sin, death, and ignorance, o'er all the world. Denham.

Young Phaeton,
From East to North irregularly hurl'd,
First set himself on fire, and then the world. Dryden.

Conjure him far to drive the Grecian train,
And hurl'd them headlong to their fleet and main. Pope.

2. To utter with vehemence. [Hurter, French, to make an howling or hideous noise.] This sense is not in use.

The glad merchant that does view
His ship far come from wat'ry wilderness,
He hurls out vows. Spenser.

H U R

Highly they rag'd against the Highest,
Hurling defiance towards the vaults of heav'n. Milton.

3. To play at a kind of game.

Hurling taketh its denomination from throwing of the ball, and is of two sorts; to goals, and to the country: for hurling to goals there are fifteen or thirty players, more or less, chosen out on each side, who strip themselves, and then join hands in ranks, one against another: out of these ranks they match themselves by pairs, one embracing another, and so pass away; every of which couple are to watch one another during this play. Carew.

HURL. n. f. [from the verb.] Tumult; riot; commotion.

He in the same hurl murdering such as he thought would withstand his desire, was chosen king. Knolles.

HURLBAT. n. f. [hurl and bat.] Whirlbat.

Ainsworth.

HURLER. n. f. [from hurl.] One that plays at hurling.

That with the hurl death itself awakes. Shakespeare.

Poor discontents,
Which gape and rub the elbow at the news
Of hurliburl innovation. Shakespeare.

Methinks, I see this hurl all on foot. Shakespeare.

All places were filled with tumult and hurliburl, every man measured the danger by his own fear; and such a pitiful cry was in every place, and in cities presently to be besieged. Knolles.

HURRICANE. n. f. [huracan, Spanish;]

HURRICANO. n. f. [ouragan, Fr.] A violent storm, such as is often experienced in the western hemisphere.

Blow winds, and crack your cheeks;
Your cataracts and hurricanes spout! Shakespeare.

A storm or hurricane, though but the force of air, makes a strange havoc where it comes. Burnet.

A poet who had a great genius for tragedy, made every man and woman too in his plays stark raging mad: all was tempestuous and blustering; heaven and earth were coming together at every word; a mere hurricane from the beginning to the end. Dryden.

The ministers of state, who gave us law,
In corners with selected friends withdraw;
There, in deaf murmurs, solemnly are wise,
Whisp'ring like winds, ere hurricanes arise. Dryden.

So, where our wide Numidian wastes extend,
Sudden th' impetuous hurricanes descend,
Wheel through the air, in circling eddies play,
Tear up the sands, and sweep whole plains away. Addison.

HURRIER. n. f. [from hurry.] One that hurries; a disturber.

Mars, that horrid hurrier of men. Chapman.

To HURRY. v. n. [hengen, to plunder, Saxon: hurs was likewise a word used by the old Germans in urging their horses to speed; but seems the imperative of the verb.] To hasten; to put into precipitation or confusion; to drive confusedly.

Your nobles will not hear you; but are gone
To offer service to your enemy;
And wild amazement hurries up and down
The little number of your doubtful friends. Shak.

For whom all this haste
Of midnight march, and hurried meeting here? Milton.

Impetuous lust hurries him on to satisfy it. South.

6 G 2 That

HUR

That hurry'd o'er
Such swarms of English to the neighb'ring shore.

Dryden.

A man has not time to subdue his passions, establish his soul in virtue, and come up to the perfection of his nature, before he is hurried off the stage.

Addison.

Stay those sudden gusts of passion,
That hurry you away.

Rowe's Royal Convert.

If a council be called, or a battle fought, you are not coldly informed, the reader is hurried out of himself by the poet's imagination.

Pope's Preface to the Iliad.

To HURRY. v. n. To move on with precipitation.

Did you but know what joys your way attend,
You would not hurry to your journey's end.

Dryd.

HURRY. n. f. [from the verb.] Tumult;
precipitation; commotion.

Among all the horrible hurries in England, Ireland was then almost quiet.

Hayward.

It might have pleased him in the present heat and hurry of his rage; but must have displeased him infinitely in the sedate reflection.

South.

After the violence of the hurry and commotion was over, the water came to a state somewhat more calm.

Woodward.

Ambition raises a tumult in the soul, it inflames the mind, and puts it into a violent hurry of thought.

Addison.

A long train of coaches and fix ran through the heart, one after another, in a very great hurry.

Addison.

I do not include the life of those who are in a perpetual hurry of affairs, but of those who are not always engaged.

Addison.

The pavement sounds with trampling feet,
And the mixt hurry barricades the street.

Gay's Trivia.

HURST. n. f. [hýrɪt, Saxon.] A grove or thicket of trees.

beurter, to strike, French.]

1. To mischief; to harm.

He that overcometh shall not be hurt of the second death.

Revelations.

Virtue may be assail'd, but never hurt;
Surpris'd by unjust force, but not enthrall'd.

Milton.

The Adonis of the sea is so called, because it is a loving and innocent fish, that hurts nothing that has life.

Walton.

2. To wound; to pain by some bodily harm.

My heart is turn'd to stone: I strike it, and it hurts my hand.

Shakespeare's Othello.

It breeds contempt
For herds to listen, or presume to pry,
When the hurt lion groans within his den.

Dryden.

3. To damage; to impair.

See thou hurt not the oil and wine.

Revelations.

HURT. n. f. [from the verb.]

Where is the wounded?

--There will be large cicatrices to shew the people:
he received seven hurts i' th' body.

Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

Cartet adventured bravely, and received two great hurts in his body.

Hayward.

The pains of sickness and hurts, hunger, thirst and cold, all men feel.

Locke.

In arms and science 'tis the same,
Our rival's hurts create our fame.

Prior.

3. Injury; wrong.

Why should damage grow to the hurt of the King?

Exra.

HURTER. n. f. [from hurt.] One that does harm.

HUS

HURTFUL. adj. [hurt and full.] Mischievous; pernicious.

Secret neglect of our duty is but only our own hurt: one man's contempt of the common prayer of the church of God may be most hurtful unto many.

Hooker.

The hurtful hazle in the vineyard shun,
Nor plant it to receive the setting sun.

Dryden's Georgics.

HURTFULLY. adv. [from hurtful.] Mischievously; perniciously.

HURTFULNESS. n. f. [from hurtful.] Mis-

Bilberry; bacca vitis idææ.

HURTLESS. adj. [from hurt.]

1. Innocent; harmless; innoxious; doing no harm.

Unto her home he oft would go,
Where bold and hurtless many a play he tries,
Her parents liking well it should be so;
For simple goodness shined in his eyes.
She joy'd to make proof of her cruelty
On gentle dame, so hurtless and so true.

Fairy Queen.

Shorter ev'ry gasp he takes,
And vain efforts and hurtless blows he makes.

Dryden's Æn.

2. Receiving no hurt.

HURTLESSLY. adv. [from hurtless.] Without harm.

Your neighbours have sound you so hurtlessly strong, that they thought it better to rest in your friendship than make new trial of your enmity.

Sidney.

HURTLESSNESS. n. f. [from hurtless.]
Freedom from any pernicious quality.

HUSBAND. n. f. [husband, master, Danish, from house and bonda, Runick, a master.]

1. The correlative to wife; a man married to a woman.

Thy husband is thy lord, thy life, thy keeper,
Thy head, thy sovereign. Shak. Taming of the Shrew.
Why, woman, your husband is in his old lunes again: he so takes on yonder with my husband, and so rails against all married mankind. Shakespeare.
This careful husband had been long away,
Whom his chaste wife and little children mourn.

Dryden.

The contract and ceremony of marriage is the occasion of the denomination of relation of husband.

Locke.

2. The male of animals.

Ev'n though a snowy ram thou shalt behold,
Prefer him not in haste, for husband to thy fold.

Dryden.

3. An oeconomist; a man that knows and practises the methods of frugality and profit. Its signification is always modified by some epithet implying bad or good.

Edward I. shewed himself a right good husband;
owner of a lordship ill husbanded. Davison on Ireland.
I was considering the shortness of life, and what ill husbands we are of so tender a fortune. Collier.

4. A tiller of the ground; a farmer.

HUS

Husband's work is laborious and hard.

Hubbard's Talm.

I heard a great husband say, that it was a common error to think that chalk helpeth arable grounds.

Bacon.

In those fields

The painful husband plowing up his ground,
Shall find all fret with rust, both pikes and shields.

Hakewille.

If continu'd rain

The lab'ring husband in his house restrain,
Let him forecall his work.

Dryden's Georgics.

To HUSBAND. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To supply with au husband.

Think you I am no stronger than my sex,
Being so father'd and so husbanded? Shakespeare.
If you shall prove
This ring was ever her's, you shall as easy
Prove that I husbanded her bed in Florence,
Where yet she never was.

Shakespeare.

In my right,

By me invested, he compeers the best.
--That were the most, if he should husband you.

Shakespeare.

2. To manage with frugality.

It will be pastime passing excellent,
If it be husbanded with modesty. Shakespeare.
The French, wisely husbanding the possession of a victory, kept themselves within their trenches.

Bacon's Henry VII.

If thou be master-gunner, spend not all
That thou canst speak at once; but husband it,
And give men turns of speech.

Herbert.

3. To till; to cultivate the ground with proper management.

A farmer cannot husband his ground, if he fits at a great rent.

Bacon.

HUSBANDLESS. adj. [from husband.]
Without an husband.

A widow, husbandless, subject to tears;
A woman, naturally born to fears.

Shakefp.

HUSBANDLY. adj. [from husband.] Frugal;

And compass it then, is a husbandly part.

Tusser.

HUSBANDMAN. n. f. [husband and man.]
One who works in tillage.

This Davy serves you for good uses; he is your servingman, and your husbandman. Shakespeare.
The mule being more swift in his labour than the ox, more ground was allowed to the mule by the husbandman.

Broomer.

HUSBANDRY. adj. [from husband.]

1. Tillage; manner of cultivating land.

He began with a wild method to run over all the art of husbandry, especially employing his tongue about well dunging of a field.

Sidney.

Ask'd if in husbandry he ought did know,
To plough, to plant, to reap, or sow. Hubbard's Tale.
Husbandry supplieth all things necessary for food.

Spenser.

Peace hath from France too long been chas'd;
And all her husbandry doth lie on heaps,
Corrupting in its own fertility.

Shakefp. Henry V.

Her plenteous womb

Expresseth its full tilth and husbandry. Shakespeare.
The seeds of virtue may, by the husbandry of Christian counsel, produce better fruit than the strength of self-nature.

Raleigh.

Husbandry the Spaniards wanting in the valleys of Mexico, could not make our wheat bear seed.

Raleigh.

A family governed with order will fall naturally to the several trades of husbandry, tillage, and pasturage.

Temple.

Let any one consider the difference between an acre of land sown with wheat, and an acre of the same land lying without any husbandry upon it, and he will find that the improvement of labour makes the value.

Locke.

2. Thrift; frugality; parsimony.

There's husbandry in heaven;
The candles are all out. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
You have already saved several millions to the publick, and that what we ask is too inconsiderable

to

H U S

to break into any rules of the strictest good husbandry. Swift.

3. Care of domestick affairs.
Lorenzo, I commit into your hands
The husbandry and manage of my house. Shakefp.

HUSH. interj. [Without etymology.]
Silence! be still! no noise!
The king hath done you wrong; but husb! 'tis so
Shakespeare.

There's something else to do; husb and be mute,
Or else our spell is marr'd. Shakespeare's Tempest.

HUSH. adj. [from the interjection.] Still;
silent; quiet.
As we often see, against some storm,
A silence in the heav'ns, the rack stand still,
The bold winds speechless, and the orb below
As husb as death. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

To HUSH. v. n. [from the interjection.]
To be still; to be silent.
This frown'd, that fawn'd, the third for shame
did blush;
Another seem'd envious or coy;
Another in her teeth did gnaw a rush;
But at these strangers presence every one did husb.
Spenser.

To HUSH. v. a. To still; to silence; to quiet; to appease.
Yet can I not of such tame patience boast,
As to be husb, and nought at all to say. Shakefp.
It was my breath that blew this tempest up,
Upon your stubborn usage of the pope;
But since you are a gentle convertite,
My tongue shall husb again this storm of war,
And make fair weather in your blust'ring land.
Shakespeare.

Speak softly;
All's husb as midnight yet. Shakespeare's Tempest
My love would speak; my duty husbes me. Shak.
When in a bed of straw we shrink together,
And the bleak winds shall whistle round our heads,
Wilt thou then talk thus to me? Wilt thou then Husb my cares thus, and shelter me with love?
Orway.

Husb'd as midnight silence go;
He will not have your acclamations now. Dryden.
Her fire at length is kind,
Calms ev'ry storm, and husbes ev'ry wind;
Prepares his empire for his daughter's ease,
And for his haunching nephews smooths the seas.
Dryden.

The court was husbed, and a whisper ran. Addison.

To HUSH up. v. a. To suppress in silence;
to forbid to be mentioned.
This matter is husbed up, and the servants are forbid to talk of it. Pope.

HU'SHONEY. n. f. [husb and money.] A bribe to hinder information; pay to secure silence.
A dextrous steward, when his tricks are found,
Hushoney sends to all the neighbours round;
His matter, unsuspecting of his pranks,
Pays all the cost, and gives the villain thanks. Swift.

HUSK. n. f. [hulsch, Dutch, or huycken, from huyt.] The outmost integument of fruits.
Do but behold yon poor and starved band,
And your fair shew shall suck away their souls,
Leaving them but the shales and husks of men.
Shakespeare.

Most seeds, in their growing, leave their husk or rind about the root. Bacon's Natural History.
Thy food shall be
The fresh brook mussels, withered roots, and husks
Wherein the acorn cradled. Shakespeare's Tempest.
Fruits of all kinds, in coat
Rough, or smooth rind, or bearded husks, or shell
She gathers; tribute large! and on the board
Heaps with unparing hand. Milton.
Some steep their seeds, and some in cauldrons boil
O'er gentle fires; the exuberant juice to drain,
And in all the start'ring husks with fruitful grain.
Dryden.

Some when the preps
Has drain'd the pulpy mass, regale their swine
With the dry refuse; thou, more wise, shalt steep

H U Z

The husks in water, and again employ
The pond'rous engine. Phillips.
Barley for ptisan was first steeped in water till it swelled; afterwards dried in the sun, then beat till the husk was taken off, and ground. Arbutnot on Coins.

Do not content yourselves with mere words, lest you feed upon husks instead of kernels. Watts.

To HUSK. v. a. [from the noun.] To strip off the outward integument.
HU'SKED. adj. [from husk] Bearing an husk; covered with a husk.
HU'SKY. adj. [from husk.] Abounding in husks; consisting of husks.
Must have found
A husky harvest from the grudging ground.
Dryden's Virgil.

With timely care
Shave the goat's shaggy beard, lest thou too late
In vain should'st seek a strainer, to dispart
The husky terrene dregs from purer must. Phillips.

HU'SSY. n. f. [corrupted from housewife: taken in an ill sense. A sorry or bad woman; a worthless wench. It is often used ludicrously in slight disapprobation.
Get you in, hussy, go: now will I personate this hopeful young jade. Southern's Innocent Adultery.

HU'STINGS. n. f. [putting, Saxon.] A council; a court held.

To HU'STLE. v. a. [perhaps corrupted from hurtle.] To shake together in confusion.
HU'SWIFE. n. f. [corrupted from housewife.]
.. A bad manager; a sorry woman. It is common to use housewife in a good, and huswife or hussy in a bad sense.
Bianca,
A huswife, that, by selling her desires,
Buys herself bread and cloth. Shakespeare's Othello.

2. An economist; a thrifty woman.
Why should you want?
The bounteous huswife, Nature, on each bush Lays her fulness before you. Shakespeare.

To HU'SWIFE. v. a. [from the noun.]
To manage with economy and frugality.
But huswifing the little Heav'n had lent,
She duly paid a groat for quarter's-rent;
And pinch'd her belly, with her daughters two,
To bring the year about with much ado. Dryden.

HU'SWIFERY. n. f. [from huswife.]
1. Management good or bad.
Good huswifery trieth
To rise with the cock;
Ill huswifery lyeth
Till nine of the clock. Tupper.

2. Management of rural business committed to women.
If cheees in dairie have Argus his eyes,
Tell Cusley the fault in her huswifery lies. Tupper.

HUT. n. f. [putte, Saxon; hute, French.]
A poor cottage.
Our wand'ring fairs, in woful state,
To a small cottage came at last,
Where dwelt a good old honest yeoman,
Who kindly did these fairs invite
In his poor hut to pass the night. Swift.
Sore pierc'd by wintry wind,
How many shrink into the sordid hut
Of cheerless poverty! Thomson.

HUTCH. n. f. [hpacca, Saxon; huche, Fr.]
A corn chest.
The best way to keep them, after they are threshed, is to dry them well, and keep them in hutches, or close casks. Mortimer.

To HUZ. v. n. [from the sound.] To buzz; to murmur.
HUZZA! interj. A shout; a cry of acclamation.
The buzzes of the rabble are the same to a bear as they are to a prince. L'Estrange.
You keep a parcel of roaring bullies about me

H Y D

day and night; buzzes and hunting-horns never let me cool. Arbutnot.

All fame is foreign, but of true desert;
Plays round the head, but comes not to the heart:
One self-approving hour whole years outweighs
Of stupid starers and of loud buzzes. Pope.

To HUZZA! v. n. [from the interjection.]
To utter acclamation.
A caldron of fat beef, and stoop of ale,
On the buzzing mob shall still prevail.
King's Cookery.

To HUZZA! v. a. To receive with acclamation.
He was buzzed into the court by several thousands of weavers and clothiers. Addison.

HYACINTH. n. f. [υάκινθος; hyacinthe,
Fr. hyacinthus, Latin.]
1. A flower.
It hath a bulbous root: the leaves are long and narrow: the stalk is upright and naked, the flowers growing on the upper part in a spike: the flowers consist each of one leaf, are naked, tubulose, and cut into six divisions at the brim, which are reflexed: the ovary becomes a roundish fruit with three angles, which is divided into three cells, which are filled with roundish seeds. Miller.

The filken fleece, impurpl'd for the loom,
Rival'd the hyacinth in vernal bloom. Pope's Odyssey.

2. The hyacinth is the same with the lapis lyncurios of the ancients. It is a less thawy gem than any of the other red ones. It is seldom smaller than a seed of hemp, or larger than a nutmeg. It is found of various degrees of deepness and paleness; but its colour is always a deathly red, with a considerable admixture of yellow; its most usual is that mixed red and yellow, which we know by the name of flame colour. Hili on Fossils.

HYACINTHINE. adj. [υάκινθος] Made of hyacinths; resembling hyacinths.

HYADES. } n. f. [υάδες] A watery con-HYADS. } stellation.
Then sailors quarter'd heav'n, and found a name
For ev'ry fix'd and ev'ry wand'ring star;
The pleiads, hyads. Dryden's Georgicks.

HYALINE. adj. [υάλινος] Glassy; crystalline; made glass; sembling glass.
From heav'n-gate not far, sounded in view
On the clear hyaline, the glassy sea. Milton.

HYBRIDOUS. adj. [υβρις, hybrida, Latin; Begotten between animals of different species.
Why such different species should not only mingle together, but also generate an animal, and yet that that hybridous production should not again generate, is to me a mystery. Ray.

HYDATIDES. n. f. [from υδα.] Little transparent bladders of water in any part:
most common in dropical persons, from a distention or rupture of the lymphic ducts.
Quincy.

All the water is contained in little bladders, adhering to the liver and peritoneum, known by the name of hydatides. Wismar.

HYDRA. n. f. [hydra, Latin.] A monster with many heads slain by Hercules:
whence any multiplicity of evils is termed a hydra.
New rebellions raise
Their hydra heads, and the false North displays
Her broken league to imp her serpent wings. Milton.
More formidable hydra stands within,
Whose jaws with iron-teeth severely grin. Dryden.
Subdue
The hydra of the many-headed hissing crew. Dryd.

HYORAGOGUES. n. f. [υδωρ and αγωγος; hy- dragogue, Fr.] Such medicines as occasion the discharge of watery humours, which is generally the case of the stronger catharticks, because they shake most forcibly the bowels and their appendages.

H Y D

HYDRAULICAL. } adj. [from hydraulick.]
HYDRAULICK. } Relating to the conveyance of water through pipes.

Among the engines in which the air is useful, pumps may be accounted, and other hydraulical engines.

We have employed a virtuoso to make an hydraulick engine, in which a chymical liquor, resembling blood, is driven through elastick channels.

HYDRAULICKS, n. s. [ὕδωρ, water, and αὐλός, a pipe.] The science of conveying water through pipes or conduits.

HYDROCELE. n. s. [ὁδροκήλη; hydrocele, Fr.] A watery rupture.

HYDROCEPHALUS. n. s. [ὕδωρ and κεφαλή.] A dropsy in the head.

A hydrocephalus, or dropsy of the head, is only incurable when the serum is extravasated into the ventricles of the brain.

HYDROGRAPHER, n. s. [ὕδωρ and γράφω; hydrographe, Fr.] One who draws maps of the sea.

It may be drawn from the writings of our hydrographers.

HYDROGRAPHY. n. s. [ὕδωρ and γραφία; hydrographie, Fr.] Description of the watery part of the terraqueous globe.

HYDROMANCY. n. s. [ὕδωρ and μαντία; hydromantie, Fr.] Prediction by water.

Divination was invented by the Persians: there are four kinds of divination; hydromancy; pyromancy, aeromancy, and geomancy.

HYDROMEL. n. s. [ὕδωρ and μέλι; hydromel, French.] Honey and water.

Hydromel is a drink prepared of honey, being one of the most pleasant and universal drinks the northern part of Europe affords, as well as one of the most ancient.

In fevers the aliments prescribed by Hippocrates were ptisans and cream of barley: hydromel, that is, honey and water, when there was no tendency to a delirium.

HYDROMETER. n. s. [ὕδωρ and μέτρον.] An instrument to measure the extent or profundity of water.

HYDROMETRY. n. s. [ὕδωρ and μέτρον.] The act of measuring the extent of water.

HYDROPHOBIA. n. s. [ὕδροφοβία; hydrophobie, Fr.] Dread of water.

Among those dismal symptoms that follow the bite of a mad dog, the hydrophobia, or dread of water is the most remarkable.

HYDROPHICAL. } adj. [ὕδροπικος; hydro- HYDROPHICK. } pique, Fr. from hydrops, Latin.]

1. Dropsical; diseased with extravasated water.

Cantharides heat the watery parts of the body; as urine, and hydrophical water. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
 The world's whole sap is sunk:
 The general balm the hydrophick earth hath drunk.

Hydrophical swellings, if they be pure, are pellucid.

Hydrophick wretches by degrees decay,
 Growing the more, the more they waste away;
 By their own ruins they augmented lye,
 With thirst and heat amidst a deluge fry.

One sort of remedy he uses in dropsies, the water of the hydrophicks.

2. Resembling dropsy.

Some men's hydrophick insatiableness learned to thirst the more, by how much more they drank.

H Y M

Every lust is a kind of hydropick distemper, and the more we drink the more we shall thirst. Tillotson.

HYDROSTATICAL. adj. [ὕδωρ and στατική.] Relating to hydrostaticks; taught by hydrostaticks.

A human body forming in such a fluid, will never be reconcileable to this hydrostatical law: there will be always something lighter beneath, and something heavier above; because bone, the heaviest in specie, will be ever in the midst.

HYDROSTATICALLY. adv. [from hydrostatical.] According to hydrostaticks.

The weight of all bodies around the earth is ever proportional to the quantity of their matter: for instance, a pound weight, examined hydrostatically, doth always contain an equal quantity of solid mass.

HYDROSTATICKS. n. s. [ὕδωρ and στατική; hydrostatique, Fr.] The science of weighing fluids; weighing bodies in fluids.

HYDRO'TICK. n. s. [ὕδωρ; hydrotique, Fr.] Purger of water or phlegm.

He seems to have been the first who divided purges into hydroticks and purgers of bile.

HYEN. } n. s. hyene, Fr. hyena, Lat.]

HYE'NA. } An animal like a wolf, said fabulously to imitate human voices.

I will weep when you are disposed to be merry; I will laugh like a hyen, when you are inclined to sleep.

A wonder more amazing would we find;
 Th' hyena shews it, of a double kind:

Varying the sexes in alternate years,
 In one begets, and in another bears.

The hyena was indeed well joined with the beaver, as having also a bag in those parts, if thereby we understand the hyena odorata, or civet cat.

The keen hyena, fellest of the fell.

HYGROMETER. n. s. [ὕγρος and μέτρον; hygrometre, Fr.] An instrument to measure the degrees of moisture.

A sponge, perhaps, might be a better hygrometer than the earth of the river.

HYGROSCOPE. n. s. [ὕγρος and σκοπία; hygroscope, Fr.] An instrument to shew the moisture and dryness of the air, and to measure and estimate the quantity of either extreme.

Moisture in the air is discovered by hygroscopes.

HYLA'RHICAL. adj. [ὕλη and ῥήσις.] Pre-siding over matter.

HYM. n. s. A species of dog; unless it is by mistake for Lym.

Avant, you curs!
 Mastiff, greyhound, mongrel grim,
 Hound or spaniel, brache or hym;
 Or bobtail tike, or trundle tail,
 Tom will make him weep and wail.

HY'MEN. n. s. [ὕμην.]
 1. The god of marriage.

2. The virginal membrane.
HYMENE'AL. } n. s. [ὕμηναιος.] A mar-
HYMENE'AN. } riage song.

And heav'nly choirs the hymenean sung.
 For her the spouse prepares the bridal ring;
 For her white virgins hymeneals sing.

HYMENE'AL. } adj. Pertaining to mar-HYMENE'AN. } riage.

The suitors heard, and deem'd the mirthful voice
 A signal of her hymeneal choice.

HYMN. n. s. [ᾠμήνη, Fr. ὕμνος.] An encomiastick song, or song of adoration to some superior being.

As I cast, in praise of mine own dame,
 So now in honour of thy mother dear,
 An honourable hymn I eke should frame.

Our solemn hymns to fullen dirges change;
 Our bridal flow'rs serve for a buried coarse.

H Y P

When steel grows

Soft as the parasite's silk, let hymns be made
 An overture for the wars. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
 There is an hymn sung; but the subject of it is always the praises of Adam, and Noah and Abraham, concluding ever with a thanksgiving for the nativity of our Saviour. Bacon.

Farewell, ye happy shades,
 Where angels first should practise hymns, and string
 Their tuneful harps, when they to heav'n would sing.

To HYMN. v. a. [ᾠμῖναι.] To praise in songs to worship with hymns.

Whose business were to serve the Lord
 High up in heav'n, with songs to hymn his throne.

To HYMN. v. n. To sing songs of adoration.

They touch'd their golden harps, and hymning
 prais'd
 God and his works.

He had not left alive this patient saint,
 This anvil of affronts, but sent him hence,
 To hold a peaceful branch of palm above,
 And hymn it in the quire.

HY'MNICK. adj. [ὕμνικός.] Relating to hymns.

He rounds the air, and breaks the hymnick notes
 In birds, heav'n's choristers, organick throats;
 Which, if they did not die, might seem to be
 A tenth rank in the heavenly hierarchy.

To HYP. v. a. [barbarously contracted from hypochondriack.] To make melancholy; to dispirit.

I have been to the last degree, hypped since I saw you.

HY'PALLAGE. n. s. [ὑπαλλάγη.] A figure by which words change their cases with each other.

HYPER. n. s. [A word barbarously curtailed by Prior from hypercritick.] A hypercritick; one more critical than necessity requires. Prior did not know the meaning of the word.

Criticks I read on other men,
 And hypers upon them again.

HYPERBOLA. n. s. (hyperbole, Fr. ὕπερβολή and βάλλω.) In geometry, a section of a cone made by a plane, so that the axis of the section inclines to the opposite leg of the cone, which in the parabola is parallel to it, and in the ellipsis intersects it. The axis of the hyperbolical section will meet also with the opposite side of the cone, when produced above the vertex.

Had the velocities of the several planets been greater or less than they are, or had their distances from the sun, or the quantity of the sun's matter, and consequently his attractive power been greater or less than they are now, with the same velocities, they would not have revolved in concentrick circles, but have moved in hyperbolas very eccentric.

HY'PERBOLE. n. s. [hyperbole, Fr. ὕπερβολή.]

A figure in rhetoric by which any thing is increased or diminished beyond the exact truth: as, he runs faster than lightning. His possessions are fallen to dust. He was so gaunt, the case of a flagellet was a mansion for him.

Terms unquar'd
 Which, from the tongue of roaring Typhon dropt,
 Would seem hyperboles.

Tassata phrases, silken terms precise,
 Three pil'd hyperboles, spruce affectation,
 Figures pedantical, these Summer flies,
 Have blown me full of maggot ostentation.

They were above the hyperboles, that fond poetry bestows upon its admired objects.

H Y P

Hyperboles, so daring and so bold,
Disdaining bounds, are yet by rules control'd;
Above the clouds, but yet within our sight,
They mount with truth, and make a tow'ring flight.
Granville.

The common people under and raiillery, or at least rhetoric, and will not take hyperboles in too literal a sense.
Swift.

HYPERBO'LLICAL. } adj. [hyperbolique, Fr.
HYPERBO'LLICK. } from hyperbola, Lat.]

1. Belonging to the hyperbola; having the nature of an hyperbola.

Cancelled in the middle with squares, with triangles before, and behind with hyperbolic lines.
Grew's Museum.

The horny or pellucid coat of the eye riseth up, as a hillock, above the convexity of the white of the eye, and is of an hyperbolic or parabolical figure.
Ray on the Creation.

2. [From hyperbole.] Exaggerating or extenuating beyond fact.

It is parabolical, and probably hyperbolic, and therefore not to be taken in a strict sense.
Boyle.

HYPERBO'LLICALLY. adv. [from hyperbolical.]

1. In form of an hyperbola.

2. With exaggeration or extenuation.

Yet may all be solved, if we take it hyperbolically.
Brown.

Scylla is seated upon a narrow mountain, which thrusts into the sea a steep high rock, and hyperbolically described by Homer as inaccessible.
Broome's Notes on the Odyssey.

HYPERBO'LLIFORM. adv. [hyperbola and forma.] Having the form, or nearly the form of the hyperbola.

HYPERBO'REAN. n. f. [hyperboréen, Fr.
hyperboreus, Lat.] Northern.

HYPERCRIT'ICK. n. f. [hypercritique, Fr. étre and critique.] A critick exact or captious beyond use or reason.

Those hypercriticks in English poetry differ from the opinion of the Greek and Latin judges, from the Italians and French, and from the general taste of all ages.
Dryden.

HYPERCRIT'ICAL. adj. [from hypercritick.]
Critical beyond necessity or use.

We are far from imposing those nice and hyper-critical punctilios, which some astrologers oblige our gardeners to.
Evelyn.

Such hypercritical readers will consider my business was to make a body of refined sayings, only taking care to produce them in the most natural manner.
Swift.

HYPERMETER. n. f. [metre and hyper.]
Any thing greater than the standard requires.

When a man rises beyond six foot, he is an hy-permeter, and may be admitted into the tall club.
Addison.

HYPERSARCO'SIS. n. f. [hyper and sarx.] The growth of fungous or proud flesh.

Where the hypersarcosis was great, I sprinkled it with precipitate, whereby I more speedily freed the ulcer of its putrefaction.
Wifeman.

HY'PHEN. n. f. [ύphen.] A note of conjunction: as vir-tus, ever-living.

HYPNO'TICK. n. f. [hypnos.] Any medicine that induces sleep.

HYPOCHO'NDRES. n. f. [hypocondre, Fr.
ύποχονδριον.] The two regions lying on each side the cartilago ensiformis, and those of the ribs, and the tip of the breast, which have in one the liver, and in the other the spleen.
Quincy.

The blood moving too slowly through the celiac and mesenterick arteries, produces various complaints in the lower bowels and hypochondres; from whence such persons are called hypochondriack.
Arbutnot.

H Y P

HYPOCHONDRI'ACAL. } adj. hypochondria- HYPOCHONDRI'ACK. } que, Fr. from hypochondres.]

1. Melancholy; disordered in the imagination.

Socrates laid down his life in attestation of that most fundamental truth, the belief of one God; and yet he's not recorded either as fool or hypochondriack.
Decay of Piety.

2. Producing melancholy; having the nature of melancholy.

Cold sweats are many times mortal, and always suspected; as in great fears, and hypochondriack passions, being a relaxation or forsaking of the spirits.
Bacon's Natural History.

HY'POCIST. n. f. [ύποκιστης; hypociste, Fr.]

Hypocist is an inspissated juice considerably hard and heavy, of a fine shining black colour, when broken. The stem of the plant is thick and fleshy; and much thicker at the top than towards the bottom. The fruits contain a tough glutinous liquor, gathered before they are ripe: the juice is expressed,
then formed into cakes.
Hill.

HYPO'CRISY. n. f. [hypocrisie, French; ύποκρισις.] Dissimulation with regard to the moral or religious character.

Next stood hypocrisy with holy leer,
Soft smiling and demurely looking down;
But hid the dagger underneath the gown.
Dryden.

Hypocrisy is much more eligible than open infidelity and vice: it wears the livery of religion, and is cautious of giving scandal: nay, continued disguises are too great a constraint: men would leave off their vices, rather than undergo the toil of practising them in private.
Swift.

HYPOCRITE. n. f. [hypocrite, French;
ύποκριτης.]

1. A dissembler in morality or religion.

He heartily prays some occasion may detain us longer: I dare swear he is no hypocrite, but prays from his heart.
Shakspeare.

A wise man hateth not the law; but he that is an hypocrite therein, is as a ship in a storm.
Eccles. xxxiii. 3.

Fair hypocrite, you seek to cheat in vain;
Your silence argues, you ask time to reign.
Dryden.
The making religion necessary to interest might increase hypocrisy; but if one in twenty should be brought to true piety, and nineteen be only hypocrites, the advantage would still be great.
Swift.

2. A dissembler.

Beware, ye honest: the third circling glass
Suffices virtue: but may hypocrites,
Who sily speak one thing, another think,
Hateful as hell, still pleas'd unwarn'd drink on,
And through intemp'rance grow a while sincere.
Phillips.

HYPOCRIT'ICAL. } adj. [from hypocrite.]
HYPOCRIT'ICK. } Dissembling; insincere; appearing differently from the reality.

Now you are confessing your enormities; I know it by that hypocritical, down-cast look.
Dryden.
Whatever virtues may appear in him, they will be esteemed an hypocritical imposture on the world; and in his retired pleasures, he will be presumed a libertine.
Rogers.

Let others skew their hypocritical face.
Swift.

HYPOCRIT'ICALLY. adv. [from hypocritical.] With dissimulation; without sincerity; falsely.

Simcon and Levi spake not only falsely, but in-fidiuously, nay hypocritically, abusing at once their profelytes and their religion.
Gov. of the Tongue.

HYPOGA'STRICK. adj. [hypogastrique, Fr.
ύπο and γαστρικ.] Seated in the lower part of the belly.

The swelling we supposed to rise from an effusion of serum through all the hypogastrick arteries.
Wifeman.

HYPOGE'UM. n. f. [ύπο and γη.] A name which the ancient architects gave to all the parts of a building that were under ground, as cellars and vaults.
Harrn.

HYPO'STASIS. n. f. [hypostase, Fr. ύποστασις.]
1. Distinct substance.

2. Personality. A term used in the doctrine of the Holy Trinity.

The oneness of our Lord Jesus Christ, referring to the several hypostases in the one eternal, indivisible, divine-nature, and the eternity of the Son's generation, and his co-eternity and consubstantiality with the Father, are assertions equivalent to those comprised in the ancient simple article.
Hammond.

HYPOSTA'TICAL. adj. [hypostatique, Fr.
from hypostasis.]

1. Constitutive; constituent as distinct ingredients.

Let our Carneades, warn men not to subscribe to the grand doctrine of the chymists, touching their three hypostatical principles, till they have a little examined it.
Boyle.

2. Personal; distinctly personal.

HYPOTENU'SE. n. f. [hypotenuse, Fr. ύποτενυση.] The line that subtends the right angle of a right-angled triangle; the sub-tense.

The square of the hypotenuse in a right-angled triangle, is equal to the squares of the two other sides.
Locke.

HYPOT'HESES. n. f. [hypothese, Fr. ύποθεσις.] A supposition; a system formed upon some principle not proved.

The mind casts and turns itself restlessly from one thing to another, till at length it brings all the ends of a long and various hypothesis together; sees how one part coheres with another, and so clears off all the appearing contrarieties that seemed to lie cross, and make the whole unintelligible.
South.

With imagin'd sovereignty
Lord of his new hypothesis he reigns:

He reigns: how long? till some usurper rise:
And he too, mighty thoughtful, mighty wise,
Studies new lines, and other circles feigns.
Prior.

HYPOTHE'TICAL. } adj. [hypothetique, Fr.
HYPOTHE'TICK. } from hypothesis.] Including a supposition; conditional.

Condition or hypothetical propositions are those whose parts are united by the conditional particle if;
as, if the sun be fixed, the earth must move.
Watts.

HYPOTHE'TICALLY. adv. [from hypothetical.] Upon supposition; conditionally.

The only part liable to imputation is calling her a goddess; yet this is proposed with modesty and doubt, and hypothetically.
Broome.

HYRST. } Are all from the Saxon hýrst,
HURST. } a wood or grove.
HERST. } Gibb.

HY'SSOP. n. f. [hyssope, Fr. hyssopus, Lat.]
A verticillate plant.

It hath been a great dispute, whether the hyssop commonly known is the same which is mentioned in Scripture.
Miller.

The hyssop of Solomon cannot be well conceived to be our common hyssop; for that is not the least of vegetables observed to grow upon walls; but rather some kind of capillaries, which only grow upon walls and stony places.
Brown.

HYSTERICAL. } adj. [hysterique, Fr. ύστε-rick.]
HYSTERICK. } Gibb.

1. Troubled with fits; disordered in the regions of the womb.

In hysterick women the rarity of symptoms doth oft strike an astonishment into spectators.
Harvey.
Many hysterical women are sensible of wind passing from the womb.
Floyer on the Humours.

2. Proceeding from disorders in the womb.

Parent of vapours, and of female wit,
Who gave th' hysterick or poetic fit.
Pope.

This terrible scene made too violent an impression upon a woman in her condition, and threw her into a strong hysterick fit.
Arbutnot and Pope.

HYSTERICKS. n. f. [ύστερικες.] Fits of women, supposed to proceed from disorders in the womb.

I

J A B

I Is in English considered both as a vowel and consonant; though, since the vowel and consonant differ in their form as well as sound, they may be more properly accounted two letters.

I vowel has a long sound, as fine, shine, which is usually marked with an e final; and a short sound, as fin, thin. Prefixed to e it makes a diphthong of the same sound with the soft i, or double e, ee: thus field, yield, are spoken as feeld, yeeld; except friend, which is spoken frend. Subjoined to a or e it makes them long, as fail, neigh; and to o makes a mingled sound, which approaches more nearly to the true notion of a diphthong, or sound composed of the sounds of two vowels in the English language, as oil, coin. The sound of i before another i, and at the end of a word is always expressed by y.

J consonant has invariably the same sound with that of g in giant, as jade, jet, jilt, jolt, just.

1. Pronoun personal. [ik, Gothick; ic, Saxon; ich, Dutch.

I, gen. me; plural we; gen. us. ic me, pe, ur.

2. The pronoun of the first person, myself.
I do not like these several councils, I. Shakespeare.
There is none greater in this house than I.

Gen. xxxix. 9.
Be of good cheer, it is I: be not afraid.
Mat. xiv. 27.

What shall I do to be for ever known,
And make thy age to come my own;
I shall like beasts to common people dye,
Unless you write my elegy. Cowley.

Hence, and make room for me. Cowley.
When chance of business parts us two,
What do our souls, I wonder, do? Cowley.

Thus, having pass'd the night in fruitless pain,
I to my longing friends return again. Dryden's Æn.
Of night impatient we demand the day,
The day arrives, and for the night we pray. Blackmore.

2. Me is in the following passage written for I.

There is but one man whom she can have, and that is me. Clarissa.

3. I is more than once in Shakespeare written for ay, or yes.

Hath Romeo slain himself? Say thou but I,
And that bare vowel, I, shall poison more
Than the death darting eye of cockatrice. Shakespeare.
Did your letters pierce the queen?

— I, sir; she took 'em and read 'em in my presence,
And now and then an ample tear trill'd down. Shakespeare.

To JA'BBER. v. n. [gabberen, Dutch.]
To talk idly; to prate without thinking;
to chatter.

We scorn, for want of talk, to jabber
Of parties. Swift.

J A C

JA'BBERER. n. f. [from jabber.] One who talks inarticulately or unintelligibly.

Out cant the Babylonian labourers
At all their dialects of jabberers. Hudibras.

JA'CENT. adj. [jacens, Lat.] Lying at length.

1. The same with hyacinth.

2. A gem of a deep reddish yellow approaching to a flame colour, or the deepest amber. Woodward.

JACK. n. f. [Probably by mistake from Jaques, which in French is James.]

1. The diminutive of John. Used as a general term of contempt for fancy or paltry fellows.

You will perceive that a Jack gardant cannot Office me from my son Coriolanus. Shakespeare.
I have in my mind

A thousand raw tricks of these bragging Jacks,
Which I will practise. Shakespeare. Merch. of Venice.

Every Jack slave has his belly-full of fighting, and I must go up and down like a cook that nobody can match. Shakespeare.

The name of instruments which supply the place of a boy, as an instrument to pull off boots.

Foot-boys, who had frequently the common name of jack given them, were kept to turn the spit, or to pull off their masters boots; but when instruments were invented for both those services, they were both called jacks. Watts's Logick.

3. An engine which turns the spit.

The excellencies of a good jack are, that the jack frame be forged and filed square; that the wheels be perpendicularly and strongly fixed on the squares of the spindles; that the teeth be evenly cut, and well smoothed; and that the teeth of the worm-wheel fall evenly into the groove of the worm. Moxon.

The ordinary jacks, used for roasting of meat, commonly consist but of three wheels. Wilkins.

A cookmaid, by the fall of a jack weight upon her head, was beaten down. Wise man's Surgery.

Some strain in rhyme; the muses on their racks
Scream, like the winding of ten thousand jacks. Pope.

4. A young pike.

No fish will thrive in a pond where roach or gudgeons are, except jacks. Mortimer's Husbandry.

5. [Jacque, Fr.] A coat of mail.

The residue were on foot, well furnished with jack and skull, pike, dagger, bucklers made of board, and slicing swords, broad, thin, and of an excellent temper. Hayward.

6. A cup of waxed leather.

Dead wine, that stinks of the borrachio, sup
From a soul jack, or greasy maple cup. Dryden.

7. A small bowl thrown out for a mark to the bowlers.

'Tis as if one should say, that a bowl equally poised, and thrown upon a plain bowling-green, will run necessarily in a direct motion; but if it be made with a byass, that may decline it a little from a straight line, it may acquire a liberty of will, and so run spontaneously to the jack. Bentley.

J A C

8. A part of the musical instrument called a virginal.

In a virginal, as soon as ever the jack falleth, and toucheth the string, the sound ceaseth. Beacon.

9. The male of animals.

boots, dressed up in a commode and a night-rail. Spectator.

JACK by the hedge. n. f. Erysimum.

Jack by the hedge is an herb that grows wild under hedges, is eaten as other fallads are, and much used in broth. Mortimer.

JACK Pudding. n. f. [jack and pudding.]
A zani; a merry Andrew.

Every jack pudding will be ridiculing palpable weaknesses which they ought to cover. L'Estrange.

A buffoon is called by every nation by the name of the dish they like best: in French jean pottage, and in English jack pudding. Guardian.

Jack pudding, in his party-colour'd jacket,
Tosses the glove, and jokes at ev'ry packet. Gray.

JACK with a Lantern. n. f. An ignis fatuus.

JACAL'ENT. n. f. [Jack in Lent, a poor starved fellow.] A simple sheepish fellow.

You little jackalant, have you been true to us?
— Ay, I'll be sworn. Shakespeare. Merry Wives of Windsor.

JACKAL. n. f. [chacal, Fr.] A small animal supposed to start prey for the lion.

The Belgians tack upon our rear,
And raking chase-guns through our sterns they send:

Close by their fireships, like jackals appear,
Who on their lions for the prey attend. Dryden.

The mighty lion, before whom stood the little jackal, the faithful spy of the king of beasts. Arbutnot and Pope.

JA'CKNAPES. n. f. [jack and ape.]

1. Monkey; an ape.

2. A coxcomb; an impertinent.

napes should grow so pert and saucy, and take so much upon him. Arb.

JACKDA'W. n. f. [jack and daw.] A cock daw; a bird taught to imitate the human voice.

To impose on a child to get by heart a long scroll of phrases, without any ideas, is a practice fitter for a jackdaw than for any thing that wears the shape of man. Watts.

JA'CKET. n. f. [jacquet, Fr.]

1. A short coat; a close waistcoat.

In a blue jacket, with a cross of red, Hubb. Tale.
And

J A D

- And hens, and dogs, and hogs are feeding by;
And here a sailor's jacket hangs to dry. Pope.
2. To beat one's JACKET, is to beat the man.
She fell upon the jacket of the parson, who stood gaping at her. L'Estrange.

- JACULATION. n. f. [jaculatio, jaculor, Latin.] The act of throwing missile weapons.
So hills amid' the air encounter'd hills,
Hurl'd to and fro with jaculation dire. Milton.
- JADE. n. f. [The etymology of this word is doubtful: Skinner derives it from gaad, a goad or spur.]
1. A horse of no spirit; a hired horse; a worthless nag.
Alas, what wights are these that load my heart!
I am as dull as Winter-starved sheep,
Tir'd as a jade in overladen cart. Sidney.
When they should endure the bloody spur,
They fall their crest, and, like deceitful jades, Sink in the trial. Shakefp. Julius Caesar.
The horsemen sit like fixed candlesticks,
With torchstaves in their hand; and their poor jades
Lob down their heads, dropping the head and hips. Shakespeare.
So have I seen with armed heel,
A wight bestride a commonweal,
While still the more he kick'd and spur'd,
The less the sullen jade has stirr'd. Hudibras.
The plain nag came upon the trial to prove those to be jades that made sport with him. L'Estrange.
False steps but help them to renew their race,
As, after stumbling, jades will mend their pace. Pope.
 2. A sorry woman. A word of contempt noting sometimes age, but generally vice.
Shall these, these old jades, pass the flower
Of youth, that you have, pass you. Chapman.
But she, the cunning'st jade alive,
Says, 'tis the ready way to thrive. Stepney.
Get in, hussy: now will I personate this young jade, and discover the intrigue. Southern.
In di'monds, pearl, and rich brocades,
She shines the first of batter'd jades,
And flutters in her pride. Swift.
 3. A young woman: in irony and slight contempt.
You see now and then some handsome young jades among them: the sluts have very often white teeth and black eyes. Addison.
- JADE. n. f. A species of stone.
The jade is a species of the jasper, and of extreme hardness. Its colour is composed of a pale blueish grey, or ash-colour, and a pale-green, not uniform. It appears dull and coarse on the surface, but it takes a very elegant polish. It is used by the Turks for handles of sabres. Hill.
- To JADE. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To tire; to harass; to dispirit; to weary: applied originally to horses.
With his banners, and his well-paid ranks,
The ne'er-yet-beaten horse of Parthia
We've jaded out o' th' field. Shak. Ant. and Cleo.
It is good in discourse to vary and intermingle speech of the present occasion with arguments; for VOL. I.

J A I

- It is a dull thing to tire and jade any thing too far. Bacon.
- If fleet dragon's progeny at last Proves jaded, and in frequent matches cast
No favour for the stallion we retain,
And no respect for the degen'rate strain. Dryden.
The mind once jaded, by an attempt above its power, is very hardly brought to exert its force again. Locke.
- There are seasons when the brain is overtired or jaded with study or thinking; and upon some other accounts animal nature may be languid or cloudy, and unfit to assist the spirit in meditation. Watts.
2. To overbear; to crush; to degrade; to harass, as a horse that is ridden too hard.
If we live thus tamely,
To be thus jaded by a piece of scarlet,
Farewell nobility. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.
 3. To employ in vile offices.
The honourable blood
Must not be shed by such a jaded groom. Shakefp.
 4. To ride; to rule with tyranny.
I do not now fool myself, to let imagination jade me: for every reason excites to this. Shakefp.
- To JADE. v. n. To lose spirit; to sink.
Many offer at the effects of friendship, but they do not last: they are promising in the beginning, but they fail and jade and tire in the prosecution. South.
- JADISH. adj. [from jade.]
1. Vitious; bad, as an horse.
That hors'd us on their backs, to show us
A jadish trick at last, and throw us. Hudibras.
When once the people get the jadish trick
Of throwing off their king, no ruler's safe. Southern.
 2. Unchaste; incontinent.
'Tis to no boot to be jealous of a woman; for if the humour takes her to be jadish, not all the locks and spies in nature can keep her honest. L'Estrange.
- To JAGG. v. a. [gagaw, flits or holes, Welsh.] To cut into indentures; to cut into teeth like those of a saw.
Some leaves are round, some long, some square, and many jagged on the sides. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
The jagging of pinks and gilliflowers is like the inequality of oak leaves; but they never have any small plain parts. Bacon.
The banks of that sea must be jagged and torn by the impetuous assaults, or the silent underminings of waves; violent rains must wash down earth from the tops of mountains. Bent.
An alder-tree is one among the lesser trees, whose younger branches are soft, and whose leaves are jag- ged. Watts.
- JAGG. n. f. [from the verb.] A protuberance or denticulation.
The figure of the leaves is divided into so many jaggs or elcalleps, and curiously indented round the edges. Ray.
Take off all the staring straws, twigs, and jaggs
in the hive, and make them as smooth as possible. Mortimer's Husbandry.
- JAGGY. adj. [from jagg.] Uneven; denticulated.
His tow'ring crest was glorious to behold;
His shoulders and his sides were scal'd with gold;
Three tongues he brandish'd when he charg'd his foes;
His teeth stood jaggy in three dreadful rows. Add.
Amid' those angies, infinitely strain'd,
They joyful leave their jaggy salts behind. Thomf.
- JAGGEDNESS. n. f. [from jagged.] The state of being denticulated; unevenness.
First draw rudely your leaves, making them plain, before you give them their veins or jaggedness. Peacocks Drawing.
- JAIL. n. f. [geol, Fr.] A gaol; a prison; a place where criminals are confined. See GAOL. It is written either way; but commonly by latter writers jail.
Away with the dotard, to the jail with him. Shakespeare.
A dependant upon him paid six thousand pounds

J A N

- ready money, which, poor man, he lived to repent in a jail. Clarendon.
He sigh'd and turn'd his eyes, because he knew
'Twas but a larger jail he had in view. Dryden.
One jail did all their criminals restrain,
Which now the walls of Rome can scarce contain. Dryden.
- JAILBIRD. n. f. [jail and bird.] One who has been in a jail.
- JAILER. n. f. [from jail.] A gaoler; the keeper of a prison.
Seeking many means to speak with her, and ever kept from it, as well because she shunned it, seeing and disdaining his mind, as because of her jealous jailers. Sidney.
This is a jailer, to bring forth
Some monstrous malefactor. Shakespeare.
His pow'r to hollow caverns is confin'd;
There let him reign, the jailer of the wind;
With hoarse commands his breathing subjects call,
And boast and bluster in his empty hall. Dryden.
Palamon, the pris'ner knight,
Restless for woe, arose before the light;
And, with his jailer's leave, desir'd to breathe
An air more welcome than the damp beneath. Dryd.
- JAKES. n. f. [Of uncertain etymology.] A house of office.
I will tread this involved villain into mortar, and daub the walls of jakes with him. Shakefp.
Their fordid avarice rakes
In excrements, and hires the very jakes. Dryden.
Some have fished the very jakes for papers left there by men of wit. Swift.
- JALAP. n. f. [jalap, French; jalapium, low Latin.]
Jalap is a firm and solid root, of a wrinkled surface, and generally cut into slices, heavy and hard to break; of a faintish smell, and of an acrid and nauseous taste. It had its name jalapium, or jalapa, from Xalapa, a town in New Spain, in the neighbourhood of which it was discovered: though it is now principally brought from the Madeiras. It is an excellent purgative where serous humours are to be evacuated. Hill's Mat. Med.
- JAM. n. f. [I know not whence derived.] A conserve of fruits boiled with sugar and water.
- JAMB. n. f. [jambe, French, a leg.] Any supporter on either side, as the posts of a door.
No timber is to be laid within twelve inches of the fore-side of the chimney jambes. Maxon.
- JAMBICK. n. f. [iambique, Fr. iambicus, Lat.] Verses composed of iambick feet, or a short and long syllable alternately: used originally in satire, therefore taken for satire.
In thy felonious heart though venom lies,
It does but touch thy Irish pen, and dies:
Thy genius calls thee not to purchase fame
In keen iambicks, but mild anagram. Dryden.
- To JANGLE. v. n. [jangler, French. Skinner.] To altercate; to quarrel; to bicker in words. Now a low word.
Good wits will be jangling; but, gentles agree,
This civil war of wits were much better us'd
On Navarre and his book-men. Shakespeare.
So far am I glad it did so sort,
And this their jangling I esteem a sport. Shakefp.
There is no error which hath not some appearance of probability resembling truth, which when men, who study to be singular, find out, straining reason, they then publish to the world matter of contention and jangling. Raleigh.
- To JANGLE. v. a. To make to sound untuneably.
Now see that noble and that sovereign reason,
Like sweet bells jangled out of tune and harsh. Shakespeare's Hamlet.
'Ere Gothick forms were known in Greece,
And in our verse 'ere monkish rhimes
Had jangled their fantastick chimes. Prior.
- JANGLER.

J A P

JA'NGLER. n. f. [from the verb.] A wrangling, chattering, noisy fellow.

JA'NIZARY. n. f. [A Turkish word.] One of the guards of the Turkish harem.

His grand vizir, presuming to invest
The chief imperial city of the West,
With the first charge compell'd in haste to rise;
The standards lost, and janizaries slain,
Render the hopes he gave his master vain. Waller.

JA'NNOCK. n. f. [probably a corruption of bannock.] Oat-bread. A northern word.

JA'NTY. adj. [corrupted from gentil, Fr.] Showy; fluttering.

This sort of woman is a janty flatterer: she hangs on her cloaths, plays her head, and varies her posture. Spectator.

JA'NUARY. n. f. [Januarius, Latin.] The first month of the year, from Janus, to whom it was among the Romans consecrated.

January is clad in white, the colour of the earth at this time, blowing his nails. This month had the name from Janus, painted with two faces, signifying Providence. Pearson.

JAPA'N. n. f. [from Japan in Asia, where figured work was originally done.] Work varnished and raised in gold and colours.
It is commonly used with another substantive, and therefore may be considered as an adjective.

The poor girl had broken a large japan glass, of great value, with a stroke of her brush. Swift.

To JAPA'N. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To varnish, and embellish with gold and raised figures.

For not the desk with silver nails,
Nor bureau of expence,
Nor standish well japan'd, avails
The writing of good sense. Swift.

2. To black and gloss shoes. A low phrase.

The god of fire
Among these gen'rous presents joins his part,
And aids with foot the new japanning art. Gay.

JAPA'NNER. n. f. [from japan.]

1. One skilled in japan work.
2. A shoemaker. So called because he makes the shoes shine.

The poor have the same itch;
They change their weekly barber, weekly news,
Prefer a new japanner to their shoes. Pope's Horace.

To JAR. v. n. [from earne, anger, Saxon;
or guerre, war, French; or garren, old Teutonic, to clamour.]

1. To strike together with a kind of short rattle.

The rings of iron, that on the doors were hung,
Sent out a jarring sound, and harshly rung. Dryden.
My knees tremble with the jarring blow. Gay.

2. To strike or sound untuneably and irregularly.

O, you kind gods!
Cure this great breach in his abused nature:
Th' untun'd and jarring senses, O, wind up,
Of this child-changed father! Shakespeare. King Lear.
I perceive you delight not in music.

—Not a whit, when it jars so. Shakespeare.
A string may jar in the best master's hand,
And the most skilful archer miss his aim. Roscomm.
He keeps his temper'd mind, serene and pure,
And every passion aptly harmoniz'd
Amid' a jarring world. Thomson's Summer.

3. To clash; to interfere; to act in opposition; to be inconsistent.

At last, though long, our jarring notes agree. Shakespeare.

For orders and degrees
Jar not with liberty, but well consist. Milton.
Venus concluded his report:

A jarring murmur fill'd the factious court:

J A S

As when a torrent rolls with rapid race,
The flood, constrain'd within a scanty space,
Roars horrible. Dryden's Aen.

4. To quarrel; to dispute.

When those renowned noble peers of Greece,
Through stubborn pride, among themselves did jar,
Forgetful of the famous golden fleece,
Then Orpheus with his harp their strife did bar. Spenser.

They must be sometimes ignorant of the means conducting to those ends, in which alone they can jar and oppose each other. Dryden.

JAR. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A kind of rattling vibration of sound.

In r, the tongue is held stiffly at its whole length, by the force of the muscles; so as when the impulse of breath strikes upon the end of the tongue, where it finds passage, it shakes and agitates the whole tongue, whereby the sound is affected with a trembling jar. Holder's Elements of Speech.

2. Clash of interests or opinions; discord; debate.

He maketh war, he maketh peace again,
And yet his peace is but continual jar:
O miserable men, that to him subject are! Fairy Queen.

Nath'less, my brother, since we parted are Unto this point, we will appease our jar. Hubbard.
Force would be right; or rather, right and wrong,
Between whose endless jar justice presides,
Would lose their names, and so would justice too. Shakespeare.

3. A state in which a door unfastened may strike the post; half opened.

The chaffering with dissenters, and dodging about this or t'other ceremony, is but like opening a few wickets, and leaving them a jar, by which no more than one can get in at a time. Swift.

4. [Giarro, Italian.] An earthen vessel.

About the upper part of the jar there appeared a good number of bubbles. Boyle.
He mead for cooling drink prepares,
Of virgin honey in the jars, Dryden.
Warriors welter on the ground,
Whilst empty jars the dire defeat resound. Garth.

JARDES. n. f. [French.] Hard callous tumours in horses, a little below the bending of the ham on the outside. This distemper in time will make the horse halt, and grow so painful as to cause him to pine away, and become light-bellied. It is most common to managed horses, that have been kept too much upon their haunches. Farrier's Dict.

JAR'GON. n. f. [jargon, Fr. gericonça, Spanish.] Unintelligible talk; gabble; gib-berish.

Nothing is clearer than mathematical demonstration, yet let one, who is altogether ignorant in mathematicks, hear it, and he will hold it to be plain fustian or jargon. Bramhall.

From this last toil again what knowledge flows?
Just as much, perhaps, as shows
That all his predecessor's rules

Were empty cant, all jargon of the schools. Prior.
During the usurpation an infusion of enthusiastick jargon prevailed in every writing. Swift.

JAR'GONELLE. n. f. A species of pear. See PEAR.

JAS'HAWK. n. f. [probably ias or eyas hawk.]
A young hawk. Ainsworth.

JAS'MINE. n. f. [gelsimum; jasmin, Fr.]
It is often pronounced jeffamins.] A creeping shrub with a fragrant flower.

Thou, like the harmless bee, may'st freely range;
From jasmine grove to grove may'st wander. Thomson.

JAS'MINE Persian. n. f. A plant. A species of lilac.

JAS'PER. n. f. [jasse, French; iaspis, Lat.]
A hard stone of a bright beautiful green colour, sometimes clouded with white,

J A U

found in masses of various sizes and shapes.
It is capable of a very elegant polish, and is found in many parts of the East Indies, and in Egypt, Africa, Tartary, and China.
Hill.

The basis of jasper is usually of a greenish hue, and spotted with red, yellow and white. Woodward.

The most valuable pillars about Rome are four columnas of oriental jasper in St. Paulina's chapel, and one of transparent oriental jasper in the vatican library. Addison on Italy.

IATROLEPTICK. adj. [iatroleptique, French; ιατρολεπτικη and αλιφω.] That which cures by anointing.

To JA'VEL, or jable. v. a. To bemire; to soil over with dirt through unnecessary travelling and travelling. This word is still retained in Scotland and the northern counties.

JA'VEL. n. f. [perhaps from the verb.] A wandering or dirty fellow.

When as time, flying with wings swift,
Expired had the term that those two javels
Should tender up a reckoning of their travels. Hubb.

Sir Thomas More, preparing himself for execution, put on his best apparel, which the lieutenant compelled him to put off again, saying, That he who should have them was but a javel. What, says Sir Thomas, shall I account him a javel, who shall this day do me so great a benefit? More.

JA'VELIN. n. f. [javeline, French.] A spear or half pike, which anciently was used either by foot or horse. It had an iron head pointed.

Others, from the wall, defend
With dart and javelin, stones and sulph'rous fire;
On each hand slaughter and gigantic deeds. Milt.
She shakes her myrtle javelins and, behind,
Her Lycian quiver dances in the wind. Dryden.

Flies the javelin swifter to its mark,
Launch'd from the vigour of a Roman arm? Addison.

JA'UNDICE. n. f. [jaunisse, jaune, yellow, French.] A distemper from obstructions of the glands of the liver, which prevents the gall being duly separated by them from the blood; and sometimes, especially in hard drinkers, they are so indurated as never after to be opened, and straiten the motion of the blood so much through that viscus, as to make it divert with a force great enough into the gastrick arteries, which go off from the hepatick, to break through them, and drain into the stomach; so that vomiting of blood, in this distemper, is a fatal symptom. Quincy.

Why should a man, whose blood is warm within,
Sit like his grandfire cut in alabaster?

Sleep when he wakes, and creep into the jaundice
By being peevish? Shakespeare. Merchant of Venice.
Those were thy thoughts, and thou could'st judge aright,

'Till int'rest made a jaundice in thy sight. Dryden.
The eyes of a man in the jaundice make yellow observations on every thing; and the soul, tinctured with any passion, diffuses a false colour over the appearances of things. Watts.

JA'UNDICED. adj. [from jaundice.] Infected with the jaundice.

All seems infected, that th' infected spy,
As all looks yellow to the jaundic'd eye. Pope.

To JAUNT. v. n. [janter, French.] To wander here and there; to baffle about.
It is now always used in contempt or levity.

I was not made a horse,
And yet I bear a burthen like an ass;
Scur-gall'd and stir'd by jaunting Bolingbroke. Shakespeare's Rich. II.

JAUNT.

IDE

JAWNT. n. f. [from the verb.] Ramble; flight; excursion. It is commonly used ludicrously, but solemnly by Milton.

Our Saviour meek, and with untroubled mind,
After his airy jaunts, though hurry'd fore,
Hungry and cold, betook him to his rest. Milton.

He sends me out on many a jaunt,
Old houses in the night to haunt. Hudibras.

They parted, and away posts the cavalier in quest
Of his new mistress: his first jaunt is to court.

If you are for a merry jaunt, I'll try for once who can foot it farthest. Dryden's Spanish Fryar.

Thus much of the scheme of my design in this part have run over, and led my reader a long and tedious jaunt, in tracing out those metallick and mineral bodies. Woodward.

J'UNTINESS. n. f. [from jaunt, or janty, corrupted from gentil, French. See JANTY.] Airyness; flutter; genteelness.

A certain stiffness in my limbs entirely destroyed that jauntiness of air I was once master of. Addison.

JAW. n. f. [joue, a cheek, French; whence joewbone, or cheekbone, then jaw.]

1. The bone of the mouth in which the teeth are fixed.

A generation whose teeth are as swords, and their jaw teeth as knives, to devour the poor. Prov. xxx.

The jaw bones, hearts, and galls of pikes are very medicinal. Walton's Angler.

Piso, who probably speaks Aristotle's meaning, said that the crocodile doth not only move his upper jaw, but that his nether jaw is immovable. Grew.

More formidable hydra stands within,
Whole jaw with iron teeth severely grin. Dryden.

2. The mouth.

My tongue cleaveth to my jaw, and thou hast brought me into the dust of death. Psal. xxii. 15.

My bended hook shall pierce their slimy jaw.
Shakespeare.

A smeary foam works o'er my grinding jaw,
And utmost anguish shakes my lab'ring frame. Rowe.

JAY. n. f. [named from his cry. Skinner.]
A bird; piaglandaria.

Two sharp winged sheers,
Deck'd with diverse plumes, like painted jays,
Were fixed at his back, to cut his airy ways. Fairy Queen.

We'll use this unwholesome humidity, this gross wat'ry pumpion—we'll teach him to know turtles from jays. Shakespeare.

What, is the jay more precious than the lark,
Because his feathers are more beautiful? Shakespeare.

I am highly delighted to see the jay or the thrush hopping about my walks. Spectator.

Admires the jay, the insects gilded wings,
Or hears the hawk, when Philomela sings. Pope.

J'ZEL. n. f. A precious stone of an azure or blue colour. Ditt.

ICE. n. f. [is, Saxon; eyse, Dutch.]

1. Water or other liquor made solid by cold.

You are no surer, no,
Than is the coal of fire upon the ice,
Or hailstone in the sun. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

Thou art all ice, thy kindness freezes. Shakespeare.

If I should ask whether ice and water were two distinct species of things, I doubt not but I should be answered in the affirmative. Locke.

2. Concreted sugar.

3. To break the Ice. To make the first opening to any attempt.

If you break the ice, and do this feat,
Achieve the elder, set the younger free
For our access, whose hap shall be to have her,
Will not so graceless be to be ingrate. Shakespeare.

Thus have I broken the ice to invention, for the lively representation of floods and rivers necessary for our painters and poets. Peacham on Drawing.

After he'd a while look'd wife,
At last broke silence and the ice. Hudibras.

TO ICE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To cover with ice; to turn to ice.

2. To cover with concreted sugar.

ICEHOUSE. n. f. [ice and house.] A house in which ice is repositied against the warm months.

ICHNEUMON. n. f. [ichneumon.] A small animal that breaks the eggs of the crocodile.

ICHNEUMONFLY. n. f. A sort of fly.
The generation of the ichneumonfly is in the bodies of caterpillars, and other nymphæ of insects.

ICHNOGRAPHY. n. f. [ichn and γραφω.]
The ground-plot.

It will be more intelligible to have a draught of each front in a paper by itself, and also to have a draught of the groundplot or ichnography of every story in a paper by itself. Moxon.

ICHOR. n. f. [ichor.] A thin watery humour like serum. Quincy.

Milk, drawn from some animals that feed only upon flesh, will be more apt to turn rancid and putrify, acquiring first a saline taste, which is a sign of putrefaction, and then it will turn into an ichor.
Arbutnot on Aliments.

ICHOROUS. adj. [from ichor.] Serous;
sanious; thin; undigested.

The lung-growth is imputed to a superficial sanious or ichorous exulceration. Harvey on Consump.

The pus from an ulcer of the liver, growing thin and ichorous, corrodes the vessels. Arbut. on Diet.

ICHTHYOLOGY. n. f. [ichthyologie, French; ichthologia, from ichthys and logos.] The doctrine of the nature of fish.

Some there are, as camels and sheep, which carry no name in ichthyology. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

ICHTHYOPHAGY. n. f. [ichthys and φαγω.]
Diet of fish; the practice of eating fish.

ICICLE. n. f. [from ice.] A shoot of ice commonly hanging down from the upper part.

If distilled vinegar or aqua-fortis be poured into the powder of loadstone, the subsiding powder, dried, retains some magnetical virtue; but if the menstruum be evaporated to a consistence, and afterwards doth shoot into icicles, or crystals, the loadstone hath no power upon them. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

From locks uncomb'd, and from the frozen beard,
Long icicles depend, and cracking sounds are heard. Dryden.

The common dropstone consists principally of spar, and is frequently found in form of an icicle, hanging down from the tops and sides of grottos.

ICINESS. n. f. [from icy.] The state of generating ice.

ICON. n. f. [ikon.] A picture or representation.

Boysardus, in his tract of divination, hath set forth the icons of these ten, yet added two others.

Some of our own nation, and many Nether-landers, whose names and icons are published, have deserved good commendation. Hakewill on Provid.

ICONOCLAST. n. f. [iconoclaste, French;
εικονοκλαστης.] A breaker of images.

ICONOLOGY. n. f. [iconologie, French; εικων and λογος.] The doctrine of picture or representation.

ICTERICAL. n. f. [icterique, French; icterus,
Latin.]

1. Afflicted with the jaundice.

In the jaundice the choler is wanting, and the icterical have a great sourness, and gripes with windiness. Floyer.

2. Good against the jaundice.

ICY. adj. [from ice.]

1. Full of ice; covered with ice; made of ice; cold; frosty.

But my poor heart first set free,
Bound in these icy chains by thee. Shak-sp.

Here feel we but the penalty of Adam,
The season's difference; as, the icy phang,
And churlish chiding of the Winter's wind. Shak.

He relates the excessive coldness of the water they met with in Summer in that icy region, where they were forced to winter. Boyle.

Bear Britain's thunder, and her crofs display
To the bright regions of the rising day;
Tempt icy seas, where scarce the waters roll,
Where clearer flames glow round the frozen pole. Pope.

2. Cold; free from passion.

Thou would'st have never learn'd
The icy precepts of respect. Shakespeare's Timon.

3. Frigid; backward.

If thou do'st find him tractable to us,
Encourage him, and tell him all our reasons;
If he be leaden, icy, cold, unwilling,
Be thou so too. Shakespeare's Richard III.

I'd. Contracted for I would.

IDEA. n. f. [idée, French; idia.] Mental image.

Whatsoever the mind perceives in itself, or is the immediate object of perception, thought, or understanding, that I call idea. Locke.

The form under which these things appear to the mind, or the result of our apprehension, is called an idea. Watts.

Happy you that may to the saint, your only idea,
Although simply attir'd, your manly affection utter. Sidney.

Our Saviour himself, being to set down the perfect idea of that which we are to pray and wish for on earth, did not teach to pray or wish for more than only that here it might be with us, as with them it is in heaven. Hooker.

Her sweet idea wander'd through his thoughts. Fairfax.

I did infer your lineaments,
Being the right idea of your father,
Both in your form and nobleness of mind. Shak-sp.

How good, how fair,
Answering his great idea! Milton's Paradise Lost.

If Chaucer by the best idea wrought,
The fairest nymph before his eyes he set. Dryden.

IDEAL. adj. [from idea.] Mental; intellectual; not perceived by the senses.

There is a two-fold knowledge of material things;
one real, when the thing, and real impression of things on our senses, is perceived; the other ideal, when the image or idea of a thing, absent in itself, is represented to and considered on the imagination. Cheyne's Phil. Prin.

IDEALLY. adv. [from ideal.] Intellectually; mentally.

A transmission is made materially from some parts, and ideally from every one. Brown's Vulgar Err.

IDENTICAL. adj. [identique, Fr.] The IDENTICK. same; implying the same thing; comprising the same idea.

The beard's th' identick beard you knew,
The same numerically true. Hudibras.

There majus is identical with magis. Hale.

Those ridiculous identical propositions, that faith is faith, and rule is a rule, are first principles in this controversy of the rule of faith, without which nothing can be solidly concluded either about rule or faith. Tillotson's Sermons.

If this pre-existent eternity is not compatible with a successive duration, as we clearly and distinctly perceive that it is not, then it remains, that some being, though infinitely above our finite comprehensions, must have had an identical, invariable continuance from all eternity, which being is no other than God. Bentley's Sermons.

IDENTITY. n. f. identité, French; identitas, school Lat.] Sameness; not diversity.

There is a fallacy of equivocation from a society in name, inferring an identity in nature: by this fallacy was he deceived that drank aqua-fortis for strong water. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

Certainly those actions must needs be regular, where there is an identity between the rule and the faculty. South's Sermons.

Considering any thing as existing, at any determined time and place, we compare it with self-existing. 6 H 2

IDL

ing at another time, and thereon form the ideas of identity and diversity. Locke.

By cutting off the sense at the end of every first line, which must always rhyme to the next following, is produced too frequent an identity in sound, and brings every couplet to the point of an epigram. Prior.

IDES. n. f. [ides, French; idus, Latin.] A term anciently used among the Romans, and still retained in the Romish calendar. It is the 13th day of each month, except in the months of March, May, July and October, in which it is the 15th day, because in these four months it was six days before the nones, and in the others four days.

A soothsayer bids you beware the ides of March. Shakespeare.

IDIOCRASY. n. f. [idiocrase, Fr. idiocrasie and ἰδιοκράσις.] Peculiarity of constitution.

Only dulness can produce;

While a little gentle jerking

Sets the spirits all a-working. Swift.

To JERK. v. n. To strike up: to accost eagerly.

J E S

eagerly. This seems to be the meaning in this place, but is mere cant.

Nor blush, should he some grave acquaintance meet,
But, proud of being known, will jerk and greet.
Dryden.

JERK. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A smart quick lash.

Contemn the silly taunts of fleeing buffoonry;
and the jerks of that wit, that is but a kind of confident folly.
Glanv.

Wit is not the jerk or sting of an epigram, nor the seeming contradiction of a poor antithesis; neither is it so much the morality of a grave sentence, affected by Lucan, but more sparingly used by Virgil.
Dryden.

2. A sudden spring; a quick jolt that shocks or starts.

Well run Tawney, the abbot's churl;
His jade gave him a jerk,
As he would have his rider hurl
His hood after the kirk.

Which never yet one friend hath lost you. Swift.

3. Buffoon; jackpudding. A jest, or licensed scoffer, was kept at court to the time of Charles the first.

Another sort of like loose fellows do pass up and down, amongst gentlemen, by the name of jesters; but are, indeed, notable rogues, and partakers not only of many stealths, but also privy to many traitorous practices.
Spenser on Ireland.

JET. n. f. [gagac, Saxon; get, Dutch; gagates, Lat.]

1. Jet is a beautiful fossil, of a firm and even structure, and a smooth surface; found in masses, seldom of a great size, lodged in clay; of a fine deep black, having a grain resembling that of wood. It is confounded with cannal-coal, which has no grain, and is extremely hard; and the jet is but moderately so. Hill.

Black, forsooth; coal-black, as jet. Shakespeare.

There is more difference between thy flesh and hers, than between jet and ivory. Shakespeare.

The bottom clear,

Now laid with many a set,

Of seed pearl, ere she bath'd her there,
Was known as black as jet. Drayton.

One of us in glass is set,

One of us you'll find in jet. Swift.

Under flowing jet,

The neck slight shaded. Thomson's Summer.

2. [Jet, Fr.] A spout or shoot of water.

Prodigious 'tis, that one attractive ray
Should this way bend, the next an adverse way!
For should th' unseen magnetick jets descend
All the same way, they could not gain 'their end.
Blackmore.

Thus the small jet, which hasty hands unlock,
Spurts in the gard'ner's eyes who turns the cock.
Pope.

3. A yard. Obsolete.

What orchard unrobbed escapes,
Or pullet dare walk in their jet? Tusser's Husb.

IGN

IGNORANCE. n. s. [ignorance, Fr. ignorantia, Latin.]

1. Want of knowledge; unlearnedness.

If all the clergy were as learned as themselves are that most complain of ignorance in others, yet our book of prayer might remain the same.

Hooker.

Ignorance is the curse of God,
Knowledge the wing wherewith we fly to heav'n.

Shaksp.

Still banish your defenders, 'till at length
Your ignorance deliver you,

As most abated captives, to some nation
That won you without blows.

Shakespeare.

If we see right, we see our woes;
Then what avails it to have eyes?

From ignorance our comfort flows,
The only wretched are the wise!

Prior.

2. Want of knowledge respecting some particular thing.

It is in every body's power to pretend ignorance of the law.

Sherlock.

JILT. n. f. [gilia, Islandick, to intrap in an amour, Mr. Lye. Perhaps from giglot, by contraction; or gillet, or gillot, the diminutive of gill, the ludicrous name of a woman. 'Tis also called jillet in Scotland.]

1. A woman who gives her lover hopes, and deceives him.

Avoid both courts and camps,
Where dilatory fortune plays the jilt
With the brave, noble, honest, gallant man,
To throw herself away on fools. Orway's Orphan.

2. A name of contempt for a woman.
When love was all an easy monarch's care,
Jilt rul'd the state, and statesmen farces writ. Pope.

TO JILT. v. a. [from the noun.] To trick a man by flattering his love with hopes, and then leaving him for another.

Tell who loves who;
And who is jilted for another's sake. Dryden.
Tell a man, passionately in love, that he is jilted; bring witnesses of the falsehood of his mistress, and three kind words of hers shall invalidate all their testimonies. Locke.

TO JILT. v. n. To play the jilt; to practise amorous deceptions.

She might have learn'd to cuckold, jilt, and sham,
Had Covent-garden been at Surinam. Congreve.

TO JINGLE. v. n. [A word made from jangle, or copied from the sound intended to be expressed.] To clink; to sound with a kind of sharp rattle.

What should the wars do with these jingling fools? Shakespeare.

With noises
Of roaring, shrieking, howling, jingling chains,
We were awaked. Shakespeare's Tempest.
The bells she jingled, and the whistle blew. Pope.

I L L

You ne'er with jingling words deceive the ear;
And yet, on humble objects, great appear. Smith.
What crowds of these, impudently bold,
In sounds and jingling syllables grown old! Pope.

JINGLE. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Any clink, or sharp rattle.
2. It is used, I think, improperly, to express the correspondence of sound in the effects of rhyme.

Vulgar judges are nine parts in ten of all nations, who call conceits and jingles wit. Dryden.

3. Anything sounding; a rattle; a bell.

If you plant where savages are, do not only entertain them with trifles and jingles, but use them justly. Bacon's Essays.

The iliac passion is a kind of convulsion in the belly.

ILIAC Passion. A kind of nervous cholic, whose seat is the ilium, whereby that gut is twisted, or one part enters the cavity of the part immediately below or above; whence it is also called the volvulus, from volvo, to roll.

Those who die of the iliac passion have their bellies much swelled. Floyer on the Humours.

ILK. adj. [ealc, Saxon.] The same. It is still retained in Scotland, and denotes each: as, ilk one of you, every one of you. It also signifies the same; as, Macintosh of that ilk, denotes a gentleman whose surname and the title of his estate are the same; as, Macintosh of Macintosh.

Shepherds, should it not yshend
Your roundels fresh, to hear a doleful verse
Of Rosalind, who knows not Rosalind,
That Colin made? ilk can I you rehearse. Spenser.

ILL. adj. [contracted from EVIL, and retaining all its senses.]

1. Bad in any respect; contrary to good, whether physical or moral; evil. See EVIL.

but ill ways, ill markets, and ill neighbours. Bacon's Essays.

Some, of an ill and melancholy nature, incline the company to be sad and ill-disposed; others, of a jovial nature, dispose them to be merry. Bacon.

2. Sick; disordered; not in health. I know not that evil is ever used in this sense.

You wish me health in very happy season;
For I am on the sudden something ill. Shakespeare.

I have known two towns of the greatest consequence lost, by the governors falling ill in the time of the sieges. Temple.

ILL. n. f.

1. Wickedness; depravity; contrariety to holiness.

Ill, to man's nature, as it stands perverted, hath a natural motion strongest in continuance. Bacon.

Young men to imitate all ills are prone;
But are compell'd to avarice alone:

For then in virtue's shape they follow vice. Dryden.
Strong virtue, like strong nature, struggles still,
Exerts itself, and then throws off the ill. Dryden.

2. Misfortune; misery.

Who can all sense of others ills escape,
Is but a brute at best in human shape. Yate's Juv.
Though plung'd in ills and exercis'd in care,
Yet never let the noble mind despair;
When press'd by dangers, and beset with foes,
The gods their timely succour interpose;
And when our virtue sinks, o'erwhelm'd with grief,
By unforeseen expedients bring relief. A. Phillips.

ILL. adv.

1. Not well; not rightly in any respect.

Ill at ease, both she and all her train
The scorching sun had borne, and beating rain. Dryden.

2. Not easily; with pain; with difficulty.

Th' imaginary relish is so sweet,
That it enchants my sense. Shakspeare.

Fortune, is nothing else but a power imaginary, to which the successes of human actions and endeavours were for their variety ascribed. Raleigh's History.

Why wilt thou add, to all the griefs I suffer, Imaginary ills and fancied tortures? Addison.

IMAGINATION. n. f. [imaginatio, Lat. from imaginer.]

1. Fancy; the power of forming ideal pictures; the power of representing things absent to one's self or others.

Imagination I understand to be the representation of an individual thought. Imagination is of three kinds: joined with belief of that which is to come; joined with memory of that which is past; and of things present, or as if they were present: for I comprehend in this imagination feigned and at pleasure, as if one should imagine such a man to be in the vestments of a pope, or to have wings. Bacon.

Our simple apprehension of corporal objects, if present, is sense; if absent, imagination: when we would perceive a material object, our fancies presents us with its idea. Glauville.

O whither shall I run, or which way fly
The sight of this so horrid spectacle,
Which erst my eyes beheld, and yet behold!
For dire imagination still pursues me. Milton.

Where beams of warm imagination play,
The memory's soft figures melt away. Pope.

2. Conception; image in the mind; idea.

Sometimes despair darkens all her imagination; sometimes the active passion of love cheers and clears her invention. Sidney.

Their virtues and superior genius imboldened them, in great exigencies of state, to attempt the service of their prince and country out of the common forms. Swift.

To IMBO'SOM. v. a. [from bosom.]

1. To hold on the bosom; to cover fondly with the folds of one's garment; to hide under any cover.

The Father infinite, By whom in bliss imbo'som'd sat the Son. Milton.

Villages imbo'som'd soft in trees, And spiry towns by surging columns mark'd. Thomson.

2. To admit to the heart, or to affection.

But glad desire, his late imbo'som'd guest, Yet but a babe, with milk of sight he nurs'd. Sidney.

Who glad t' imbo'som his affection vile, Did all she might, more plainly to appear. F. Q.

To IMBO'UND. v. a. [from bound.] To inclose; to shut in.

That sweet breath, Which was imbound in this beauteous clay. Shak.

To IMBO'W. v. a. [from bow.] to arch; to vault.

Prince Arthur gave a box of diamond sure, Imbow'd with gold and gorgeous ornament. F. Q.

Imbow'd windows be pretty retiring places for conference; they keep both the wind and sun off. Bacon.

Let my due feet never fail To walk the studious cloister's pale, And love the high imbow'd roof, With antick pillar massy proof. Milton.

IMBO'WMENT. n. f. [from imbow.] Arch; vault.

The roof all open, not so much as any imbowment near any of the walls left. Bacon.

To IMBOW'ER. v. a. [from bower.] To cover with a bower; to shelter with trees.

And stooping thence to Ham's imbowering walks, In spotless peace retired. Thomson.

To IMBRA'NCLE. v. a. To intangle. A low word.

With subtle cobweb cheats They're catch'd in knotted law, like nets; In which, when once they are imbrangled, The more they stir, the more they're tangled. Hudibras.

IMBRICATED. adj. [from imbrex, Latin.] Indented with concavities; bent and hollowed like a roof or gutter-tile.

IMBRICA'TION. n. f. [imbrex, Latin.] Concave indenture.

All is guarded with a well-made tegument, adorned with neat imbrications, and many other fineries. Derham.

To IMBRO'WN. v. a. [from brown.] To make brown; to darken; to obscure; to cloud.

Where

I M I

Where the morning sun first warmly smote
The open field, and where the unperc'd shade
Imbrown'd the noontide bow'rs. Milton.
The foot grows black that was with dirt im-brown'd,
And in thy pocket glingling his pence found. Gay.
Another age shall see the golden ear
Imbrown the slope, and nod on the parterre. Pope.
Imbrown'd with native bronze, lo! Henly stands. Pope.

To IMBRU'E. v. a. [from in and brue.]

1. To steep; to soak; to wet much or long. This seems indifferently written with im or em. I have sustained both modes of writing.

Thou mad'st many hearts to bleed
Of mighty victors, with wide wounds embru'd,
And by thy cruel darts to thee subdu'd. Spenser.
There streams a spring of blood so fast
From those deep wounds, as all embru'd the face
Of that accursed caiff. Daniel's Civil War.
The merciless Turks, embru'd with the Christian blood, were weary of slaughter, and began greedily to seek after the spoil. Knoller.
At me, as at a mark, his bow he drew,
Whose arrows in my blood their wings imbrue. Sandys.

Lucius pities the offenders,
That would imbrue their hands in Cato's Blood. Addison.

Lo! these hands in murder are imbru'd,
Those trembling feet by justice are pursu'd. Prior.
There, where two ways in equal parts divide,
The direful monster from a far descry'd
Two bleeding babes depending at her side;
Whose panting vitals, warm with life, she draws,
And in their hearts embru'd her cruel claws. Pope.
His virgin sword Aegythus' veins imbru'd;
The murd'rer fell, and blood aton'd for blood. Pope.

A good man chuses rather to pass by a verbal injury than imbrue his hands in blood. Clarissa.

2. To pour; to emit moisture. Obsolete.

Some bathed kisses, and did oft imbrue

The sugar'd liquor through his melting lips. F. Q.

To IMBRU'TE. v. a. [from brute.] To degrade to brutality.

I, who erst contended
With gods to sit the highest, am now constrain'd
Into a beast; and mix with bestial slime,
This essence to incarnate and imbrute. Milton.

To IMBRU'TE. v. n. To sink down to brutality.

The soul grows clotted by contagion,
Imbodies and imbrates, 'till she quite lose
The divine property of her first being. Milton.

To IMBU'E. v. a. [imbuo, Latin.] This word, which seems wanting in our language, has been proposed by several writers, but not yet adopted by the rest.

Imbu, French, the participial adj. is only used.] To tincture deep; to imbibe or soak with any liquor or die.

I would render this treatise intelligible to every rational man, however little versed in scholastick learning; among whom I expect it will have a fairer passage, than among those that are deeply imbued with other principles. Digby.

Clothes which have once been thoroughly imbued with black, cannot well afterwards be dyed into lighter colour. Boyle.

Where the mineral matter is great, so as to take the eye, the body appears imbued and tinctured with the colour. Woodward.

To IMAU'RSE. v. a. [bourse, French.]

To stock with money. This should be emburse, from embourser, Fr.

IMITABIL'ITY. n. f. [imitabilis, Latin.]

The quality of being imitable.

According to the multifariousness of this imita- bility, so are the possibilities of being. Norris.

IMITABLE. adj. [imitabilis, Latin; imita- ble, French.]

I M M

1. Worthy to be imitated; deserving to be copied.

How could the most base men, and separate from all imitable qualities, attain to honour but by an observant slavish course? Raleigh.

As acts of parliament are not regarded by most imitable writers, I account the relation of them improper for history. Hayward.

2. Possible to be imitated; within reach of imitation.

The characters of men placed in lower stations of life, are more useful, as being imitable by greater numbers. Atterbury.

To IMITATE. v. a. [imitor, Latin; imiter,
French.]

1. To copy; to endeavour to resemble.

We imitate and practise to make swifter motions than any out of your muskets. Bacon.

Despise wealth and imitate a god. Corway.

I would care for some stable man of note,
And imitate his language and his coat. Man of Taste.

2. To counterfeit.

This hand appear'd a shining sword to wield,
And that sustain'd an imitated shield. Dryden's Aen.

3. To pursue the course of a composition, so as to use parallel images and examples.
For shame! what imitate an ode! Gay.

IMITATION. n. f. [imitatio, Latin; imita- ti n, French.]

1. The act of copying; attempt to resemble.

2. That which is offered as a copy.

Since a true knowledge of nature gives us pleasure, a lively imitation of it, either in poetry or painting, must produce a much greater; for both these arts are not only true imitations of nature, but of the best nature. Dryden.

3. A method of translating looser than paraphrase, in which modern examples and illustrations are used for ancient, or domestick for foreign.

In the way of imitation, the translator not only varies from the words and sense, but forsakes them as he sees occasion; and, taking only some general hints from the original, runs division on the groundwork. Dryden.

IMITATIVE. adj. [imitativus, Latin.]

1. Inclined to copy; as, Man is an imitative being.

2. Aiming at resemblance; as, Painting is an imitative art.

3. Formed after some original.

This temple, less in form, with equal grace,
Was imitative of the first in Thrace. Dryden.

IMITATOR. n. f. [Latin; imitateur, Fr.]

One that copies another; one that endeavours to resemble another.

Imitators are but a servile kind of cattle says the poet. Dryden.

IMMACULATE. adj. [immaculatus, Latin;
immaculé, French.]

1. Spotless; pure; undefiled.

To keep this commandment immaculate and blameless, was to teach the gospel of Christ. Hooker.

His words are bonds, his oaths are oracles;

His love sincere, his thoughts immaculate. Shakefp.

The king, whom catholicks count a faint-like and immaculate prince, was taken away in the flower of his age. Bacon.

Were but my soul as pure

From other guilts as that, Heav'n did not hold
One more immaculate. Denham's Sophy.

2. Pure; limpid.

Thou clear, immaculate, and silver fountain,
From whence this stream, through muddy passages,
Hath had his current and deli'd himself. Shakefp.

To IMMANACLE. v. a. [from manacle.]

To fetter; to confine.

Thou can'st not touch the freedom of my mind
With all thy charms, although this corporal rind
Thou hast immanacled. Milton.

I M M

IMMA'NE. adj. [immanis, Latin.] Vast;
prodigiously great.

IMMANENT. adj. [immanent, French; in and maneo, Latin.] Intrinsic; inherent; internal.

Judging the infinite essence by our narrow selves,
we ascribe intellects, volitions, and such like im- manent actions to that nature which hath nothing in common with us. Glanville.

What he wills and intends once, he willed and intended from all eternity; it being grossly contrary to the very first notions we have of the infinite per-fections of the Divine Nature to state or suppose any new immanent act in God. South.

IMMANIFEST. adj. [in and manifest.] Not manifest; not plain. Not in use.

A time not much unlike that which was before time immanifest and unknown. Brown's Vulg. Err.

IMMANITY. n. f. [immanitas, Lat.] Barbarity; savageness.

It was both impious and unnatural,
That such immanity and bloody strife
Should reign among professors of one faith. Shakefp.

IMMARCESSIBLE. adj. [in and marcesco, Latin.] Unfading. Diet.

IMMARTIAL. adj. [in and martial.] Not warlike.

My pow'rs are unfit, Myself immartial. Chapman's Odyssey.

To IMMA'SK. v. a. [in and mask.] To cover; to disguise.

I have cases of buckram for the nonce, to immask
our noted outward garments. Shakespeare's Henry IV.

IMMATERIAL. adj. [immaterial, French; in and materia, Latin.]

1. Incorporeal; distinct from matter; void of matter.

Angels are spirits immaterial and intellectual, the glorious inhabitants of those sacred palaces, where there is nothing but light and immortality; no shadow of matter for tears, discontentments, griefs, and uncomfortable passions to work upon; but all joy, tranquillity, and peace, even for ever and ever, do well. Hooker.

As then the soul a substance hath alone,
Besides the body, in which she is confined;

So hath she not a body of her own,
But is a spirit, and immaterial mind. Davies.

Those immaterial felicities we expect, suggest the necessity of preparing our appetites, without which heaven can be no heaven to us. Decay of Piety.

No man that owns the existence of an infinite spirit can doubt of the possibility of a finite spirit; that is, such a thing as is immaterial, and does not contain any principle of corruption. Tilloch.

2. Unimportant; without weight; impertinent; without relation. This sense has crept into the conversation and writings of barbarians; but ought to be utterly rejected.

IMMATERIA'LITY. n. f. [from immaterial.]

Incorporeity; distinctness from body or matter.

When we know cogitation is the prime attribute of a spirit, we infer its immateriality, and thence its immortality. Watts.

IMMATERIALLY. adv. [from immaterial.]

In a manner not depending upon matter.

The visible species of things strike not our senses immaterially; but streaming in corporal rays do carry with them the qualities of the object from whence they flow, and the medium through which they pass.
Brown's Vulgar Errors.

IMMATERIALIZED. adj. [from in and ma- teria, Latin.] Distinct from matter; incorporeal.

Though assiduity in the most fixed cogitation be no trouble to immaterIALIZED spirits, yet is it more than our embodied souls can bear without lassitude.
Glanville. Scopsia.

IMMATE.

I M M

IMMATERIALNESS, n. f. [from immaterial.] Distinctness from matter.

IMMATERIAL, adj. [in and materia, Lat.] Not consisting of matter; incorporeal; wanting body.

It is a virtue which may be called incorporeal and immaterial, whereof there be in nature but few.

Bacon.

After a long enquiry of things immerse in matter, I interpose some object which is immaterial, or less material; such as this of sounds.

Bacon.

IMMATU'RE, adj. [immaturus, Latin.]

1. Not ripe.

2. Not perfect; not arrived at fulness or completion.

The land enterprize of Panama was an ill measured and immature counsel, grounded upon a false account, that the passages were no better fortified than Drake had left them.

Bacon.

This is your time for faction and debate, For partial favour, and permitted hate: Let now your immature dissension cease, Sit quiet.

Dryden.

3. Hasty; early; come to pass before the natural time.

We are pleased, and call not that death immature, if a man lives 'till seventy.

Taylor.

IMMATU'RELY, adv. [from immature.] Too soon; too early; before ripeness or completion.

IMMATU'RENESS, } n. f. [from immature.]
IMMATU'RITY, } Unripeness; incompleteness; a state short of completion.

I might reasonably expect a pardon from the ingenious for faults committed in an immaturity of age and judgment.

Glanville.

IMMEABILITY, n. f. [immeabilis, Latin.] Want of power to pass. So it is used in the example; but it is rather, incapability of affording passage.

From this phlegm proceed white cold tumours, viscosity, and consequently immeability of the juices.

Arbutnot.

IMMEASURABLE, adj. [in and measure.] Immense; not to be measured; indefinitely extensive.

Churches reared up to an height immeasurable, and adorned with far more beauty in their restoration than their founders before had given them.

Floeker.

From the shore

They view'd the vast immeasurable abyss, Outrageous as a sea, dark, wasteful, wild.

Milton.

Immeasurable strength they might behold In me, of wisdom nothing more than mean.

Milton.

What a glorious show are those beings entertained with, that can see such tremendous objects wandering through those immeasurable depths of ether!

Addison's Guardian.

Nor friends are there, nor vessels to convey, Nor oars to cut th' immeasurable way.

Pope's Odyssey.

IMMEASURABLY, adv. [from immeasurable.] Immensely; beyond all measure.

The Spaniards immeasurably bewail their dead.

Spenser.

There ye shall be fed, and fill'd

Immeasurably; all things shall be your prey.

Milton.

IMMECHANICAL, adj. [in and mechanical.] Not according to the laws of mechanics.

We have nothing to do to show any thing that is immechanical, or not according to the established laws of nature.

Cheyne.

Nothing will clear a head possessed with immechanical notions.

Mead.

IMME'DIACY, n. f. [from immediate.] Personal greatness; power of acting without dependance. This is a harsh word, and sense peculiar, I believe, to Shakespeare.

He led our pow'r,

Bore the commission of my place and person, The which immediacy may well stand up, And call itself your brother.

Shakespeare. King Lear.

I M M

IMMEDIATE, adj. [immediat, French; in and medius, Latin.]

1. Being in such a state with respect to something else as that there is nothing between them; proximate; with nothing intervening.

Moses mentions the immediate causes of the deluge, the rains and the waters; and St. Peter mentions the more remote and fundamental causes, that constitution of the heavens.

Burnet.

2. Not acting by second causes.

It is much to be ascribed to the immediate will of God, who giveth and taketh away beauty at his pleasure.

Abbot.

3. Instant; present with regard to time. Prior therefore should not have written more immediate.

Immediate are my needs, and my relief, Must not be tolt and turn'd to me in words, But find supply immediate.

Shakespeare. Timon.

Death denounc'd that day, Which he presumes already vain, and void, Because not yet inflicted, as he fear'd, By some immediate stroke.

Milton's Paradise Lost.

But she, how'er of vict'ry sure, Contemns the wreath too long delay'd;

And arm'd with more immediate pow'r, Calls cruel silence to her aid.

Prior.

IMMEDIATELY, adv. [from immediate.]

1. Without the intervention of any other cause or event.

God's acceptance of it, either immediately by himself, or mediately by the hands of the bishop, is that which vests the whole property of a thing in God.

South.

Milton's Agonistes.

IMMEMORABLE, adj. [immemorabilis, Lat.] Not worth remembering.

IMMEMORIAL, adj. [immemorial, French; in and memoria, Latin.] Past time of memory; so ancient that the beginning cannot be traced.

All the laws of this kingdom have some memorials in writing, yet all have not their original in writing; for some obtained their force by immemorial usage or custom.

Hale.

By a long immemorial practice, and prescription of an aged thorough-paced hypocrisy, they come to believe that for a reality, which, at first practice of it, they themselves knew to be a cheat.

South.

IMMENSE, adj. [immense, Fr. immensus, Lat.] Unlimited; unbounded; infinite.

O goodness infinite! goodness immense! That all this good of evil shall produce!

Milton.

As infinite duration hath no relation unto motion and time, so infinite or immense essence hath no relation unto body; but is a thing distinct from all corporeal magnitude, which we mean when we speak of immensity, and of God as of an immense being.

Grew.

IMMENSELY, adv. [from immense.] Infinitely; without measure.

We shall find that the void space of our system is immensely bigger than all its corporeal mass.

Bentley.

IMMENSITY, n. f. [immensité, French.] Unbounded, greatness, infinity.

I M M

By the power we find in ourselves of repeating, as often as we will, any idea of space, we get the idea of immensity.

Locke.

He that will consider the immensity of this fabrick, and the great variety that is to be found in this inconsiderable part of it which he has to do with, may think that in other mansions of it there may be other and different intelligent beings.

Locke.

All these illustrious worlds,

And millions which the glass can ne'er descry, Lost in the wilds of vast immensity, Are suns, are centers.

Blackmore's Creation.

To IMMERGE, v. a. [immergo, Latin.] To put under water.

IMMERIT, n. f. [immerito, Latin.] Want of worth; want of desert. This is a better word than demerit which is now used in its stead.

When I receive your lines, and find there expressions of a passion, reason and my own immerit tell me it must not be for me.

Suckling.

To IMMERSE, v. a. [immersus, Latin.]

1. To put under water.

2. To sink or cover deep.

He stood

More than a mile immers'd within the wood; At once the wind was laid.

Dryden.

They observed that they were immersed in their rocks, quarries, and mines, in the same manner as they are at this day found in all known parts of the world.

Woodward.

3. To keep in a state of intellectual depression.

It is a melancholy reflection, that our country, which, in times of popery, was called the nation of saints, should now have less appearance of religion in it than any other neighbouring state or kingdom; whether they be such as continue still immersed in the errors of the church of Rome, or such as are recovered out of them.

Addison's Freeb.

We are prone to engage ourselves with the business, the pleasures, and the amusements of this world: we give ourselves up too greedily to the pursuit, and immerse ourselves too deeply in the enjoyments of them.

Atterbury.

It is impossible to have a lively hope in another life, and yet be deeply immersed in the enjoyments of this.

Atterbury.

IMMERSE, adj. [immersus, Latin.] Buried; covered; sunk deep.

After long inquiry of things immerse in matter, I interpose some object which is immaterial, or less material; such as this of sounds, that the intellect may become not partial.

Bacon.

IMMERSION, n. f. [immersio, Latin; immersion, French.]

1. The act of putting any body into a fluid below the surface.

Achilles's mother is said to have dipped him, when he was a child, in the river Styx, which made him invulnerable all over, excepting that part which the mother held in her hand during this immersion.

Addison's Guardian.

2. The state of sinking below the surface of a fluid.

3. The state of being overwhelmed or lost in any respect.

Many persons, who, through the heat of their lusts and passions, through the contagion of ill example, or too deep an immersion in the affairs of life, swerve from the rules of their holy faith; yet would, upon extraordinary warning, be brought to comply with them.

Atterbury.

IMMETHODICAL, adj. [in and methodical.] Confused; being without regularity; being without method.

M. Bayle compares the answering of an immethodical author to the hunting of a duck: when you

TO INARCH. v. a. [in and arch.]

Inarching is a method of grafting, which is commonly called grafting by approach. This method of grafting is used when the stock and the tree may be joined: take the branch you would inarch, and,

having fitted it to that part of the stock where you intend to join it, pare away the rind and wood on one side about three inches in length: after the same manner cut the stock or branch in the place where the graft is to be united, so that they may join equally together that the sap may meet: then cut a little tongue upwards in the graft, and make a notch in the stock to admit it; so that when they are joined the tongue will prevent their slipping, and the graft will more closely unite with the stock. Having thus placed

placed them exactly together, tie them; then cover the place with grafting clay, to prevent the air from entering to dry the wound, or the wet from getting in to rot the stock: you should fix a stake into the ground, to which that part of the stock, as also the graft, should be fastened, to prevent the wind from breaking them asunder. In this manner they are to remain about four months, in which time they will be sufficiently united; and the graft may then be cut from the mother-tree, observing to slope it off close to the stock, and cover the joined parts with fresh grafting clay. The operation is always performed in April or May, and is commonly practised upon oranges, myrtles, jasmines, walnuts, firs, and pines, which will not succeed by common grafting or budding. Miller.

By inchmeal a disease! Shakespeare's Tempest.

To INCHOATE. v. a. [inchoo, Lat.] To begin; to commence.

It is neither a substance perfect, nor a substance
inchoate, or in the way of perfection. Raleigh's History.

INCHOATION. n. s. [inchoatus, Lat.] Inception; beginning.

It discerneth of four kinds of causes; forces, frauds, crimes various of stellation, and the in- choations or middle acts towards crimes capital, not actually perpetrated. Bacon.

The setting on foot some of those arts in those parts would be looked upon as the first inchoation of them, which yet would be but their reviving.

Hale's Origin of Mankind.

INCHOATIVE. adj. [inchoative, French; inchoativus, Lat.] Inceptive; noting inchoating or beginning.To INCI'DE. v. a. [from incido, to cut, Latin.]

Medicines are said to incide which consist of pointed and sharp particles; as acids, and most salts, by which the particles of other bodies are divided from one another: thus expectorating medicines are said to incide or cut the phlegm. Quincy.

The menses are promoted by all saponaceous substances, which incide the mucus in the first passages. Arbutnot.

INCIDENCE. n. s. [incido, to fall, Lat.]INCIDENCY. n. s. [incidence, French.]1. The direction with which one body strikes upon another, and the angle made by that line, and the plane struck upon, is called the angle of incidence. In the occurrences of two moving bodies, their incidence is said to be perpendicular or oblique, as their directions or lines of motion make a straight line or an oblique angle at the point of contact. Quincy.

In mirrors there is the like angle of incidence, from the object of the glass, and from the glass to the eye. Bacon.

He enjoys his happy state most when he communicates it, and receives a more vigorous joy from the reflexion than from the direct incidency of his happiness. Norris.

In equal incidences there is a considerable inequality of refractions, whether it be that some of the incident rays are refracted more and others less constantly, or one and the same ray is by refraction disturbed. Newton's Opticks.

The permanent whiteness argues, that in like incidences of the rays there is no such separation of the emerging rays. Newton.

2. [Incidents, Lat.] Accident; hap; casualty.

What incidency thou do'st guess of harm declare,
Is creeping towards me. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.

INCIDENT. adj. [incident, Fr. incidents, Lat.]

1. Casual; fortuitous; occasional; happening accidentally; issuing in beside the main design; happening beside expectation.

As the ordinary course of common affairs is disposed of by general laws, so likewise men's rarer incident necessities and utilities should be with special equity considered. Hooker.

I would note in children not only their articulate answers, but likewise smiles and frowns upon incident occasions. Wotton.

In a complex proposition the predicate or subject is sometimes made complex by the pronouns who, which, whose, whom, &c. which make another proposition: as, every man, who is pious, shall be saved: Julius, whose surname was Cæsar, overcame Pompey: bodies, which are transparent, have many pores. Here the whole proposition is called the primary or chief, and the additional proposition is called an incident proposition. Watts.

2. Happening; apt to happen.

Constancy is such a firmness of friendship as overlooks all those failures of kindness, that through passion, incident to human nature, a man may be guilty of. South.

INCIDENT. n. s. [incident, Fr. from the adjective.] Something happening beside the main design; casualty.

His wisdom will fall into it as an incident to the point of lawfulness. Bacon's Holy War.

No person, no incident in the play, but must be of use to carry on the main design. Dryden.

INCIDENTAL. adj. Incident; casual; happening by chance; not intended; not deliberate; not necessary to the chief purpose.

The satisfaction you received from those inci- dental discourses which we have wandered into.

Milton.

By some, religious duties scarce appear to be regarded at all, and by others only as an incidental business, to be done when they have nothing else to do. Rogers.

INCIDENTALLY. adv. [from incidental.]

Beside the main design; occasionally.

These general rules are but occasionally and in- *cidental*ly mentioned in Scripture, rather to manifest unto us a former, than to lay upon us a new obligation. Sanderson.

I treat either purposely or *incidental*ly of colours.

Boyle.

INCIDENTLY. adv. [from incident.] Occasionally; by the bye; by the way.

It was *incident*ly moved amongst the judges what should be done for the king himself, who was at-tainted; but resolved that the crown takes away defects. Bacon's Henry VII.

To INCI'NERATE. v. a. [in and cineres, Lat.] To burn to ashes.

By baking, without melting, the heat induratheth, then maketh fragile! lastly, it doth incinerate and calcinate. Bacon.

Fire burneth wood, making it first luminous, then black and brittle, and lastly broken and incinerate.

Bacon.

These drops are soon incinerated and calcined into such salts which produce coughs. Harvey on Consump.

INCINERATION. n. s. [incineration, Fr. from incinerate.] The act of burning any thing to ashes.

I observed in the first salt of urine, brought by deuration to be very white, a taste not unlike common salt, and very differing from the caustick liviate taste of other salts made by incineration.

Boyle.

INCIRCUMSPECTION. n. s. [in and circumspection.] Want of caution: want of heed.

An unexpected way of delusion, whereby he more easily led away the incircumspection of their belief.

Brown.

1. A cut; a wound made with a sharp instrument. Generally used for wounds made by a surgeon.

Let us make incision for your love.

To prove whose blood is reddest, his or mine. Shak.

God help thee, shallow man; God make inci- sion in thee, thou art raw. Shak. As you like it.

The reception of one is as different from the admission of the other, as when the earth falls open under the incisions of the plough, and when it gapes to drink in the dew of heaven, or the refreshments of a shower. South.

A small incision knife is more handy than a larger for opening the bag. Sharp's Surgery.

2. Division of viscosities by medicines.

Absterion is a scouring off, or incision of viscous humours, and making them fluid, and cutting between them and the part; as in nitrous water, which scoureth linen. Bacon.

INCI'SIVE. adj. [incisif, Fr. from incisus, Lat.] Having the quality of cutting or dividing.

The colour of many corpuscles will cohere by being precipitated together, and be destroyed by the effusion of very piercing and incisive liquors. Boyle.

INCI'SOR. n. s. [incisor, Latin.] Cutter; tooth in the forepart of the mouth.INCI'SOR. adj. [incisore, Fr.] Having the quality of cutting.INCI'SURE. n. s. [incisura, Lat.] A cut; an aperture.

In some creatures it is wide, in some narrow, in some with a deep incisure up into the head, for the better catching and holding of prey, and comminuting of hard food. Derham.

INCITATION. n. s. [incitatio, Lat.] Incitement; incentive; motive; impulse;

the act of inciting; the power of inciting.

Dr. Ridley defines magnetical attraction to be a natural incitation and disposition conforming unto contiguity, an union of one magnetical body unto another. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

The multitude of objects do proportionably multiply both the possibilities and incitations.

Government of the Tongue.

The mind gives not only licence, but incitation to the other passions to act with the utmost impetuosity.

Decay of Piety.

To INCI'TE. v. a. [incito, Lat. inciter, Fr.]

To stir up; to push forward in a purpose; to animate; to spur; to urged on.

How many now in health
Shall drop their blood, in approbation
Of what your reverence shall incite us to? Shakesp.
No blown ambition doth our arms incite;
But love, dear love, and our ag'd father's right. Shakesp.

Antiochus, when he incited Ptolemy to join in war, set before him the greatness of the Romans, comparing it to a fire, that took and spread from kingdom to kingdom. Bacon.

Nature and common reason, in all difficulties, where prudence or courage are required, do rather incite us to fly for assistance to a single person than a multitude. Swift.

INCITE-

INCITEMENT. n. s. [from incite.] Motive; incentive; impulse; inciting cause.

A marvel it were, if a man of great capacity, having such incitements to make him desirous of all furtherances unto his cause, could espy in the whole scripture of God nothing which might breed at the least a probable opinion of likelihood, that divine authority was the same way inclinable. Hooker.

Hardlib seems sent hither by some good providence, to be the occasion and incitement of great good to this island. Milton.

If thou must reform the stubborn times,

From the long records of a distant age

Derive incitements to renew thy rage. Pope's Statius.

INCI'VIL. adj. [incivil, Fr.] Unpolished. See UNCIVIL.

INCIVILITY. n. s. [incivilité, Fr. in and civility.]

He does offend against that reverence which is due to the common apprehensions of mankind, whether true or not, which is the greatest incivility. Tillotson.

2. Act of rudeness. In this sense it has a plural.

Abstain from dissolute laughter, uncomely jests, loud talking and jeering, which, in civil account, are called indecencies and incivilities. Taylor.

INCLEMENCY. n. s. [inclemence, Fr. inclementia, Lat.] Unmercifulness; cruelty; severity; harshness; roughness.

And though by tempests of the prize bereft,

In heaven's inclemency some ease we find:

Our foes we vanquish'd by our valour left. Dryden.

INCLEMENT. adj. [in and clemens, Latin.] Unmerciful; unpitying; void of tenderness; harsh. It is used oftener of things than of men.

Teach us further by what means to shun

Th' inclement seasons, rain, ice, hail, and snow. Milton.

I stand

Naked, defenceless, on a foreign land:

Propitious to my wants, a veil supply,

To guard the wretched from th' inclement sky. Pope.

INCLINABLE. adj. [inclinabilis, Lat.]

1. Having a propension of will; favourably disposed; willing; tending by disposition: with to.

People are not always inclinable to the best. Spenser.

A marvel it were, if a man of capacity could espy in the whole scripture nothing which might breed a probable opinion, that divine authority was the same way inclinable. Hooker.

The gall and bitterness of certain men's writings, who spared him little, made him, for their sakes, the less inclinable to that truth which he himself should have honoured. Hooker.

Desire,

Inclinable now grown to touch or taste,

Solicited her longing eye. Milton.

2. Having a tendency.

If such a crust naturally fell, then it was more likely and inclinable to fall this thousand years than the last; but if the crust was always gradually nearer and nearer to falling, that plainly evinces that it had not endured eternally. Bentley.

INCLINATION. n. s. [inclinatio, Fr. inclinatio, Lat.]

1. Tendency towards any point: with to.

The two rays, being equally refracted, have the same inclination to one another after refraction which they had before; that is, the inclination of half a degree answering to the sun's diameter. Newton.

2. Natural aptness.

Though most of the thick woods are grubbed up since the promontory has been cultivated, there are still many spots of it which shew the natural inclination of the soil leans that way. Addison.

3. Propension of mind; favourable disposition; incipient desire.

The king was wonderfully disquieted, when he found that the prince was totally aliened from all thoughts of or inclination to the marriage. Clarendon.

A mere inclination to a thing is not properly a willing of that thing; and yet, in matters of duty, men frequently reckon it for such: for otherwise how should they so often plead and rest in the honest and well inclined disposition of their minds, when they are justly charged with an actual non-performance of the law? Sentb.

4. Love; affection; regard. In this sense it admits for.

We have had few knowing painters, because of the little inclination which princes have for painting. Dryden.

4. Disposition of mind.

INCLINATORY. adj. [from incline.] Having a quality of inclining to one or other.

If that inclinatorily virtue be destroyed by a touch from the contrary pole, that end which before was elevated will then decline. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

INCLINATORILY. adv. [from inclinatorily.]

Obliquely; with inclination to one side or the other; with some deviation from North and South.

Whether they be refrigerated inclinatorily, or somewhat equinozially, that is, toward the eastern or western points, they discover some verticity. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

To INCLINE. v. n. [inclinare, Lat. inclinare, Fr.]

1. To bend; to lean; to tend toward any part: with to or towards.

Her house inclined unto death, and her paths unto the dead. Prov. ii. 18.

Still to this place

My heart inclines, still hither turn my eyes; Hither my feet unbidden find their way. Romv.

2. To be favourably disposed to; to feel desire beginning.

Doth his majesty

Incline to it, or no?

—He seems indifferent;

Or rather swaying more upon our parts. Shakesf.

Their hearts inclined to follow Abimelech. Judges.

To INCLINE. v. a.

1. To give a tendency or direction to any place or state.

The timely dew of sleep, Now falling with soft slumb'rous weight, inclines Our eye-lids. Milton.

Thus far both armies to Belinda yield;

Now to the baron fate inclines the field. Pope.

A tow'ring structure to the palace join'd;

To this his steps the thoughtful prince inclined. Pope.

2. To turn towards any thing, as desirous or attentive.

Incline our hearts to keep this law. Com. Prayer.

You have not inclined your ear unto me. Jeremiah.

But that from us aught should ascend to heav'n

So prevalent, as to concern the mind

Of God high-blest, or to incline his will,

Hard to belief may seem, yet this will prayer. Milton.

3. To bend; to incurvate.

With due respect my body I inclin'd,

As to some being of superior kind. Dryden.

To INCLIP. v. a. [in and clip.] To grasp; to inclose; to surround.

Whate'er the ocean pales, or sky inclips,

Is thine, if thou wilt ha't. Shakesf. Ant. and Cleop.

To shut up in a cloister.

To INCLO'UD. v. a. [in and cloud.] To darken; to obscure.

In their thick breaths,

Rank of gross diet, shall we be inclouded,

And forc'd to drink their vapour. Shakesf.

To INCLU'DE. v. a. [include, Lat.]

1. To inclose; to shut in: as, the shell includes a pearl.

2. To comprise; to comprehend.

This desire being recommended to her Majesty, it liked her to include the same within one intire leaf. Baron.

The marvellous fable includes whatever is supernatural, and especially the machines of the gods. Pope.

Instead of enquiring whether he be a man of virtue, the question is only whether he be a Whig or a Tory; under which terms all good and ill qualities are included. Swift.

INCLU'SIVE. adj. [inclusif, Fr.]

1. Inclosing; encircling.

O, would that the inclusive verge Of golden metal, that must round my brow, Were red-hot steel, to sear me to the brain! Shak.

2. Comprehended in the sum or number: as, from Wednesday to Saturday inclusive; that is, both Wednesday and Saturday taken into the number.

I'll search where ev'ry virtue dwells,

From courts inclusive down to cells. Swift.

INCLU'SIVELY. adv. [from inclusive.] The thing mentioned reckoned into the account. See INCLUSIVE.

Thus much shall serve for the several periods or growth of the common law, until the time of Edward I. inclusively. Hale.

All articulation is made within the mouth, from the throat to the lips inclusively; and is differenced partly by the organs used in it, and partly by the manner and degree of articulating. Holder.

INCOAGULABLE. adj. [in and coagulable.] Incapable of concretion.

INCOEXISTENCE. n. s. [in and coexistence.] The quality of not existing together; non-association of existence. An unusual word.

Another more incurable part of ignorance, which sets us more remote from a certain knowledge of the coexistence or incoexistence of different ideas in the same subject, is, that there is no discoverable connection between any secondary quality and those primary qualities it depends on. Locke.

INCO'G. adv. [corrupted by mutilation from incognito, Latin.] Unknown; in private.

But if you're rough, and use him like a dog,

Depend upon it, he'll remain incog. Addison.

INCO'GITANCY. n. s. [incogitantia, Latin.] Want of thought.

One man's fancies are laws to successors, who afterwards misname all unobsequiousness to their incogitancy, presumption. Boyle.

Next to the stupid and merely vegetable state of incogitancy, we may rank partial and piece-meal consideration. Decay of Piety.

INCO'GITATIVE. adj. [in and cogitative.] Wanting the power of thought.

Purely material beings, as clippings of our beards, and sensible, thinking, perceiving beings, such as we find ourselves, we will call cogitative and incogitative beings. Locke.

INCO'GNITO. adv. [incognitus, Latin.] In a state of concealment.

'Twas long ago

Since gods came down incognito. Prior.

INCOHERENCE. } n. s. [in and coherence.]

INCOHERENCY. } 1. Want of cohesion; looseness of material parts.

If plaister be beaten into an impalpable powder, when poured out it will emulate a liquor, by reason that the smallness and incoherence of the parts do both make them easy to be put into motion, and makes the pores they intercept so small, that they interrupt not the unity or continuity of the mass. Boyle.

2. Want of connection; incongruity; inconsequence of argument; want of dependence of one part upon another.

I find that laying the intermediate ideas naked in their due order, shews the incoherence of the argumentations better than syllogisms. Locke.

Incoherences in matter, and suppositions without proofs, put handomely together, are apt to pass for strong reason. Locke.

INCOHERENT. adj. [in and coherent.]

1. Wanting cohesion; loose; not fixed to each other.

Had the strata of stone become solid, but the matter whereof they consist continued lax and incoherent, they had consequently been as pervious as those of marle or gravel. Woodward.

2. Inconsequential; inconsistent; having no dependance of one part upon another.

We have instances of perception whilst we are asleep, and retain the memory of them; but how extravagant and incoherent are they, and how little conformable to the perfection of a rational being! Locke.

INCOHERENTLY. adv. [from incoherent.]

Inconsistently; inconsequentially.

The character of Eurylochus is the imitation of a person confounded with fears, speaking irrationally and incoherently. Brome.

INCOMBUSTIBILITY. n. s. [from incombustible.]

The quality of resisting fire so that it cannot consume.

The stone in the Apennines is remarkable for its shining quality, and the amianthus for its incombustibility. Ray.

INCOMBUSTIBLE. adj. [incombustible, Fr.

in and combustible.] Not to be consumed by fire.

It agrees in this common quality ascribed unto both, of being incombustible, and not consumable by fire. Wilkins.

INCOMBUSTIBLENESS. n. s. [from incombustible.]

The quality of not being wasted by fire.

INCOME. n. s. [in and come.] Revenue; produce of any thing.

Thou who repinest at the plenty of thy neighbour, and the greatness of his incomes, consider what are frequently the dismal consequences of all this. Sautb.

No fields afford

So large an income to the village lord. Dryden.

St. Gaul has scarce any lands belonging to it, and little or no income but what arises from its trade: the great support of this little state is its linen manufacture. Addison on Italy.

Notwithstanding the large incomes annexed to some few of her preferments, this church hath in the whole little to subsist on. Atterbury.

INCOMMENSURABILITY. n. s. [from incommensurable.]

The state of one thing with respect to another, when they cannot be compared by any common measure.

INCOMMENSURABLE. adj. [French, from in, con, and mensurabilis, Latin.] Not to be reduced to any measure common to both; not to be measured together, such as that the proportion of one to the other can be told.

Our disputations about vacuum or space, incommensurable quantities, in the infinite divisibility of matter, and eternal duration, will lead us to see the weakness of our nature. Watts.

INCOMMENSURATE. adj. [in, con, and mensura, Lat.] Not admitting one common measure.

The diagonal line and side of a quadrate, which, to our apprehension, are incommensurate, are yet commensurable to the infinite comprehension of the divine intellect. More.

As all other measures of time are reducible to these three; so we labour to reduce these three, though strictly of themselves incommensurate to one another, for civil use, measuring the greater by the less. Holder on Time.

If the year comprehend days, it is but as any greater space of time may be said to comprehend a less, though the less space be incommensurate to the greater. Holder on Time.

TO INCOMMUNICATE. } v. a. [incommodo, to INCOMMUNICATE. } Latin; incom-

moder, Fr.] To be inconvenient to; to hinder or embarrass without very great injury.

A gnat, planted upon the horn of a bull, begged the bull's pardon; but rather than incommode ye, says he, I'll remove. L'Estrange.

Although they sometimes molest and incommode the inhabitants, yet the agent, whereby both the one and the other is effected, is of that indispensable necessity to the earth and to mankind, that they could not subsist without it. Woodward.

INCOMMUNICABLE. adj. [incommodus, Latin.]

Inconvenient; vexatious without great mischief.

Things of general benefit, for in this world what is so perfect that no inconvenience doth ever follow it? may by some accident be incommodious to a few. Hooker.

Men's intentions in speaking are to be understood, without frequent explanations and incommodious interruptions. Locke.

INCOMMUNICABLY. adv. [from incommo- dious.] Inconveniently; not at ease.

INCOMMUNICABLENESS. n. s. [from incom- modious.] Inconvenience.

Diseases, disorders, and the incommodiousness of external nature are inconsistent with happiness. Burnet.

INCOMMUNICABLE. n. s. [incommode, Fr.

incommoditas, Latin.] Inconvenience; trouble.

Declare your opinion, what incommodity you have conceived to be in the common law, which I would have thought most free from all such dislike. Spenser's State of Ireland.

If iron can be incorporated with flint or stone, without over great charge, or other incommodity, the cheapness doth make the compound stuff profitable. Bacon.

By considering the region and the winds, one might so cast the rooms, which shall most need fire, that he should little fear the incommodity of smok. Wotton's Architecture.

INCOMMUNICABILITY. n. s. [from in- communicable.] The quality of not being impartible.

INCOMMUNICABLE. adj. [incommunicable,

Fr. in and communicable.]

1. Not impartible; not to be made the common right, property, or quality of more than one.

They cannot ask more than I can give, may I but reserve to myself the incommunicable jewel of my conscience. King Charles.

Light without darkness is the incommunicable claim of him that dwells in light inaccessible. Glawville.

It was agreed on both sides, that there was one supreme excellency, which was incommunicable to any creature. Sittingfleet.

2. Not to be expressed; not to be told.

Neither did he treat them with these petulantiaes of favour in the extraordinary discoveries of the gospel only, but also of those incommunicable revelations of the divine love, in reference to their own personal interest in it. Sautb.

INCOMMUNICABLY. adv. [from incommunicable.] In a manner not to be imparted or communicated.

To annihilate is both in reason, and by the consent of divines, as incommunicably the effect of a power divine, and above nature, as is creation itself. Hakewill on Providence.

INCOMMUNICATING. adj. [in and communicating.] Having no intercourse with each other.

The judgments and administrations of common justice are preserved from that confusion that would ensue, if the administration was by several incommunicating hands, or by provincial establishments. Hale's Common Law.

INCOMPACT. } adj. [in and compact.]

INCOMPACTED. } Not joined; not cohering.

Salt, say they, is the basis of solidity and permanency in compound bodies, without which the other four elements might be variously blended, but would remain incompact. Boyle.

INCOMPARABLE. adj. [incomparable, Fr. in and comparable.] Excellent above compare; excellent beyond all competition.

My heart would not suffer me to omit any occasion, whereby I might make the incomparable Pamela see how much extraordinary devotion I bore to her service. Sidney.

A most incomparable man, breath'd as it were To an untirable and continue goodness. Shaksp.

Her words do shew her wit incomparable. Shak.

Now this mask

Was cried incomparable, and th' ensuing night

Made it a fool and beggar. Shaksp. Henry VIII.

It I could leave this argument of your incomparable beauty, I might turn to one which would equally oppress me with its greatness. Dryden.

INCOMPARABLY. adv. [from incomparable.]

1. Beyond comparison; without competition.

A sounder it had, whom I think incomparably the wisest man that ever the French church did enjoy, since the hour it enjoyed him. Hooker.

Self-preservation will oblige a man voluntarily to undergo any less evil, to secure himself but from the probability of an evil incomparably greater. Sautb.

2. Excellently; to the highest degree. A low phrase.

There are the heads of Antoninus Pius, the Faustinas, and Marcus Aurelius, all incomparably well cut. Addison on Italy.

INCOMPASSIONATE. adj. [in and compassion- ate.] Void of pity; void of tenderness.

INCOMPATIBILITY. n. s. [properly in- competibility, in and competo, Latin.] Inconsistency of one thing with another. He overcame that natural incompatibility, which hath been noted between the vulgar and the sovereign favour. Wotton.

The reason of the stress rests not upon the incompetibility of excess of one infinitude above another, either in intension or extension; but the incompetibility of any multitude to be infinite. Hale.

INCOMPATIBLE. [incompatible, French;

rather incompetible, as it is sometimes written; in and competo, Lat.]

1. Inconsistent with something else; such as cannot subsist or cannot be possessed together with something else: it is followed by with.

Fortune and love have ever been so incompatible, that it is no wonder, madam, if, having had so much of the one for you, I have ever found so little of the other for myself. Snelli.

May

May not the outward expressions of love in many good Christians be greater to some other object than to God? Or is this incompatible with the sincerity of the love of God? Hammond.

We know those colours which have a friendship with each other, and those which are incompatible, by mixing together those colours of which we would make trial. Dryden.

Sense I have proved to be incompatible with mere bodies, even those of the most compound and elaborate textures. Bent.

2. It is sometimes with to.

The repugnancy of infinitude is equally incompatible to continued or successive motion, and depends upon the impossibility of things successive with infinitude. Hale.

INCOMPATIBLY. adv. [for incompatibly, from incompatible.] Inconsistently.

INCOMPETENCY. n. f. [incompetence, Fr. from incompetent.] Inability; want of adequate ability or qualification.

Our not being able to discern the motion of a shadow on a dial-plate, or that of the index upon a clock, ought to make us sensible of the incompetency of our eyes to discern some motions of natural bodies incomparably slower than these. Boyle.

INCOMPETENT. adj. [in and competent.]

Not suitable; not adequate; not proportionate. In the civil law it denotes some defect of right to do any thing.

Richard III had a resolution, out of hatred to his brethren, to disable their issues, upon false and incompetent pretexts, the one of attainder, the other of illegitimation. Bacon.

Every speck does not blind a man, nor does every infirmity make one unable to discern, or incompetent to reprove, the grosser faults of others.

Government of the Tongue.

I thank you for the commission you have given me: how I have acquitted myself of it must be left to the opinion of the world, in spite of any protestation which I can enter against the present age, as incompetent or corrupt judges. Dryden.

Laymen, with equal advantages of parts, are not the most incompetent judges of sacred things. Dryden.

An equal attraction on all sides of all matter, is just equal to no attraction at all; and by this means all the motion in the universe must proceed from external impulse alone, which is an incompetent cause for the formation of a world. Bentley.

INCOMPETENTLY. adv. [from incompetent.]

Unsuitably; unduly.

INCOMPLETE. adj. [in and complete.] Not perfect; not finished.

It pleaseth him in mercy to account himself incomplete and maimed without us. Hooker.

In incomplete ideas we are apt to impose on ourselves, and wrangle with others, especially where they have particular and familiar names. Locke.

INCOMPLETENESS. n. f. [from incomplete.]

Imperfection; unfinished state.

The incompleteness of our seraphick lover's happiness, in his fruition, proceeds not from their want of satisfactoriness but of an intire possession. Boyle.

INCOMPLIANCE. n. f. [in and compliance.]

1. Untractableness; impracticableness; contradictory temper.

Self-conceit produces perverseness and incompliance of humour in things lawful and indifferent. Tulstow.

2. Refusal of compliance.

Consider the vast disproportion between the worst inconveniencies that can attend our incompliance with men, and the eternal displeasure of an offended God. Rogers.

Disturbed; discomposed; disordered. Not much used.

Somewhat incomposed they are in their strutting, and extraordinary tender of their young ones. Hawth.

IMPOSSIBILITY. n. f. [from impossible.]

Quality of being not possible but by the negation or destruction of something; inconsistency with something.

The manifold impossibilities and lubricities of matter cannot have the same fitness in any modification. More.

Though the repugnancy of infinitude be equally impossible to continued or successive motion, and depends upon the impossibility of the very nature of things successive or extensive with infinitude, yet that impossibility is more conspicuous in discrete quantity, that ariseth from individuals already actually distinguished. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

IMPOSSIBLE. adj. [in, con, and possible.]

Not possible together; not possible but by the negation of something else.

IMPREHENSIBILITY. n. f. [imprehenfibilit, Fr. from imprehenfible.] Unconceiveableness; superiority to human understanding.

IMPREHENSIBLE. adj. [imprehenfible, Fr. in and comprehenfible.]

1. Not to be conceived; not to be fully understood.

His precepts tend to the improving and perfecting the most valuable part of us, and annexing imprehenfible rewards as an eternal weight of glory. Hammond.

Stars that seem to roll

Space imprehenfible.

Milton.

One thing more is imprehenfible in this matter.

Locke.

The laws of vegetation and propagation are the arbitrary pleasure of God, and may vary in manners imprehenfible to our imaginations. Bentley.

2. Not to be contained. Not now used.

Presence every where is the sequel of an infinite and imprehenfible substance; for what can be every where, but that which can no where be comprehended? Hosker.

IMPREHENSIBLENESS. n. f. [from imprehenfible.] Unconceiveableness.

I might argue from God's *imprehenfible*ness: if we could believe nothing but what we have ideas of, it would be impossible for us to believe God is imprehenfible. Watts.

IMPREHENSIBLY. adv. [from imprehenfible.] In a manner not to be conceived.

We cannot but be assured that the God, of whom and from whom are all things, is imprehenfibly infinite. Locke.

IMCOMPRESSIBLE. adj. [incompressible, Fr. in and compressible.] Not capable of being compressed into less space.

Hardness is the reason why water is incompressible, when the air lodged in it is exhausted. Cheyne.

IMCOMPRESSIBILITY. n. f. [from incompressible.] Incapacity to be squeezed into less room.

INCONCURRING. adj. [in and concur.] Not concurring.

Now sportive youth

Carol incondite rhymes with suiting notes, And quaver inharmonious. Philips.

INCONDITIONAL. adj. [in and conditional.]

Without exception; without limitation; without stipulation.

From that which is but true in a qualified sense, an inconditional and absolute verity is inferred. Brown.

INCONDITIONATE. adj. [in and condition.]

Not limited; not restrained by any conditions. Absolute.

They ascribe to God, in relation to every man, an eternal, unchangeable, and inconditionate degree of election or reprobation. Boyle.

INCONFORMITY. n. f. [in and conformity.]

Incompliance with the practice of others.

We have thought their opinion to be, that utter inconformity with the church of Rome was not an extremity wherunto we should be drawn for a time, but the very mediocrity itself, wherein they meant we should ever continue. Hosker.

INCONFUSION. n. f. [in and confusion.]

Distinctness. Not used.

The cause of the confusion in sounds, and the inconfusion in species visible, is, for that the light worketh worketh in right lines, and so there can be no coincidence in the eye; but sounds that move in oblique and arcuate lines, must needs encounter and disturb the one the other. Bacon.

INCONGRUENCE. n. f. [in and congruence.]

Unsuitableness; want of adaptation.

Humidity is but relative, and depends upon the congruity or incongruence of the component particles of the liquor to the pores of the bodies it touches. Boyle.

INCONGRUITY. n. f. [incongruité, Fr. from incongruus.]

1. Unsuitableness of one thing to another.

The fathers make use of this acknowledgment of the incongruity of images to the Deity, from thence to prove the incongruity of the worship of them. Stillingfleet.

2. Inconsistency; inconsequence; absurdity; impropriety.

To avoid absurdities and incongruities, is the same law established for both arts; the painter is not to paint a cloud at the bottom of a picture, nor the poet to place what is proper to the end in the beginning of a poem. Dryden.

3. Disagreement of parts; want of symmetry.

She, whom after what form soe'er we see,
In discord and rude incongruity;
She, she is dead, she's dead. Donne.

INCONGRUOUS. adj. [incongru, Fr. in and congruus.]

1. Unsuitable; not fitting.

Wiser heathens condemned the worship of God as incongruous to a divine nature, and a disparagement to the deity. Stillingfleet.

2. Inconsistent; absurd.

INCONGRUOUSLY. adv. [from incongruous.]

Improperly; unsuitably.

INCONNEXEDLY. adv. [in and connex.]

INCONSCIONABLE. adj. [in and conscionable.] Void of the sense of good and evil: without influence of conscience.

Not used.

So inconscionable are these common people, and so little feeling have they of God, or their own soul's good. Spranger.

INCONSEQUENCE. n. f. [inconsequence, Fr. inconsequentia, Latin.] Inconclusiveness; want of just inference.

This he bestows the name of many fallacies upon; and runs on with shewing the inconsequence of it, as though he did in earnest believe it were an impertinent answer. Stillingfleet.

INCONSEQUENT. adj. [in and consequent, Lat.] Without just conclusion; without regular inference.

The ground he assumes is unsound, and his illation from thence deduced inconsequent. Blakewill.

Men rest not in false apprehensions without absurd and inconsequent deductions from fallacious foundations, and misapprehended mediums, erecting conclusions no way inferrible from their premises. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

INCONSIDERABLE. adj. [in and considerable.] Unworthy of notice; unimportant; mean; of little value.

I am an inconsiderable fellow, and know nothing. Denham.

The most inconsiderable of creatures may at some time or other come to revenge itself upon the greatest. L'Estrange.

Casting my eyes upon the ants, continually taken up with a thousand cares, very inconsiderable with respect to us, but of the greatest importance for them they appeared to me worthy of my curiosity. Addison.

May not planets and comets perform their motions more freely, and with less resistance, in this ethereal medium than in any fluid, which fills all space adequately without leaving any pores, and by consequence is much denser than quicksilver or gold? And may not its resistance be so small as to be inconsiderable? Newton.

If we were under any real fear of the papists, it would be hard to think us so stupid not to be equally apprehensive with others, since we are likely to be the greatest sufferers; but we look upon them to be altogether as inconsiderable as the women and children. Swift.

Let no sin appear small or inconsiderable by which an almighty God is offended, and eternal salvation endangered. Rogers.

INCONSIDERABLENESS. n. f. [from inconsiderable.] Small importance.

To those who are thoroughly convinced of the inconsiderableness of this short dying life, in comparison of that eternal state which remains for us in another life, the consideration of a future happiness is the most powerful motive. Tillotson.

From the consideration of our own smallness and inconsiderableness, in respect of the greatness and splendor of heavenly bodies, let us with the holy psalmist raise up our hearts. Ray on the Creation.

INCONSIDERATE. adj. [inconsideré, Fr. inconsideratus, Latin.]

1. Careless; thoughtless; negligent; inattentive; inadvertent: used both of men and things.

When thy inconsiderate hand
Flings ope this casement with my trembling name,
Then think this name alive, and that thou thus
In it offend'st my genius. Donne.

If you lament it,
That which now looks like justice, will he thought
An inconsiderate rashness. Denham's Suppl.

It is a very unhappy token of our corruption, that there should be any so inconsiderate among us as to sacrifice morality to politics. Addison's Freeholder.

2. Wanting due regard; with of before the subject.

He who laid down his life for the redemption of the transgressions which were under the first Testament, cannot be so inconsiderate of our frailties. Decay of Piety.

INCONSIDERATELY. adv. [from inconsiderate.] Negligently; thoughtlessly; inattentively.

The king, transported with just wrath, inconsiderately fighting and precipitating the charge, before his whole numbers came up, was slain in the pursuit. Bacon.

Joseph was delighted with Mariamne's conversation, and endeavoured with all his art to set out the excess of Herod's passion for her but when he still found her cold and incredulous, he inconsiderately told her the private order he had left behind. Addison.

INCONSIDERATENESS. n. f. [from inconsiderate.] Carelessness; thoughtlessness; negligence; want of thought; inadvertence; inattention.

If men do know and believe that there is such a being as God, not to demean ourselves towards him, as becomes our relation to him, is great stupidity and inconsiderateness. Tillotson.

INCONSIDERATION. n. f. [inconsideration, French, in and consideration.] Want of thought; inattention; inadvertence.

S. Gregory reckons uncleanness to be the parent of blindness of mind, inconsideration, precipitancy or giddiness in actions, and self-love. Taylor.

INCONSISTING. adj. [in and consistent.] Not consistent; incompatible with. Not used.

The serious and actions of a sinner are all unnatural, and the manners false; that is, inconsistent with the character of mankind. Dryden's Dives.

INCONSISTENCE. n. f. [from inconsistent.]

1. Such opposition as that one proposition infers the negation of the other; such contrariety that both cannot be together.

There is a perfect inconsistency between that which is of debt, and that which is of free gift. South.

2. Absurdity in argument or narration; argument or narrative, where one part destroys the other; self-contradiction.

3. Incongruity.

Mutability of temper, and inconsistency with ourselves, is the greatest weakness of human nature. Addison.

If a man would register all his opinions upon love, politics, religion and learning, what a bundle of inconsistencies and contradictions would appear at last. Swift.

4. Unsteadiness; changeableness.

INCONSISTENT. adj. [in and consistent.]

1. Incompatible; not suitable; incongruous: followed by with.

Finding no kind of compliance, but sharp protestations against the demands, as inconsistent with conscience, justice, or religion, the conference broke off. Clarendon.

Compositions of this nature, when thus restrained, show that wisdom and virtue are far from being inconsistent with politeness and good humour. Addison's Freeholder.

2. Contrary, so as that one infers the negation or destruction of the other.

The idea of an infinite space or duration is very obscure and confused, because it is made up of two parts very different, if not inconsistent. Lacke.

3. Absurd; having parts of which one destroys the other.

INCONSISTENTLY. adv. [from inconsistent.] Absurdly; incongruously; with self-contradiction.

INCONSOLABLE. adj. [inconsolable, Fr. in and console.] Not to be comforted; sorrowful beyond susceptibility of comfort.

Her women will represent to me that she is inconsolable, by reason of my unkindness. Addison.

King Charles.

Thy heels' self's sleeve will drink the colour'd oil,
And spot indelible thy pocket son. Guy's Trivia.

2. Not to be annulled.

They are endued with indelible power from above to seal, to govern this household, and to consecrate pastors and stewards of it to the world's end. Spratt.

INDELICACY. n. f. [in and delicacy.]

Want of delicacy; want of elegant decency.

Your papers would be chargeable with worse than indelicacy, they would be immodest, did you treat detestable uncleanness as your tally and impertinent self-love. Addison.

INDELICATE. adj. [in and delicate.] Wanting decency; void of a quick sense of decency.INDEMNIFICATION. n. f. [from indemnify.]

1. Security against loss or penalty.
 2. Reimbursement of loss or penalty.
- To INDEMNIFY. v. a. [in and deemnify.]
1. To secure against loss or penalty.
 2. To maintain unhurt.

Insolent signifies rude and haughty, indemnify to keep safe. Watts.

INDEMNITY. n. f. [indemnité, French.]

Security from punishment; exemption from punishment.

I will use all means, in the ways of anxiety and indemnity, which may most fully remove all fears, and bury all jealousies in forgetfulness. King Charles.

TO INDENT. v. a. [in and dens, a tooth, Latin.]

To mark any thing with inequalities like a row of teeth; to cut in and out; to make to wave or undulate.

About this week

A green and gilded snake had wreath'd itself,
Who with her head, nimble in threats, approach'd
The opening of his mouth; but suddenly,
Seeing Orlando, it unlink'd itself,
And with indented glides did slip away
Into a bush. Shakespeare. As you like it.

The serpent then, not with indented wave,
Prone on the ground, as snakes; but on his rear
Circular base of rising folds, that tower'd Fold above fold, a surging maze! Milton.

Trent, who, like some earth-born giant, spreads
His thirty arms along the indented meads. Milton.

The margins on each side do not terminate in a straight line, but are indented. Woodward.

TO INDENT. v. n. [from the method of cutting counterparts of a contract together, that, laid on each other, they may fit, and any want of conformity may discover a fraud.] To contract; to bargain; to make a compact.

Shall we buy treason, and indent with fears,
When they have lost and forfeited themselves? Shakespeare.

He defends to the solemnity of a pact and covenant, and has indented with us. Decay of Piety.

INDE'NT. n. f. [from the verb.] Inequality;

incisure; indentation. This is little used.

Trent shall not wind with such a deep indent,
To rob me of so rich a bottom here. Shakespeare.

INDENTATION. n. f. [in and dens, Latin.]

An indenture; waving in any figure.

The margins do not terminate in a straight line, but are indented; each indentation being continued in a small ridge, to the indentation that answers it on the opposite margin. Woodward.

INDE'NTURE. n. f. [from indent.] A covenant, so named because the counterparts are indented or cut one by the other; a contract, of which there is a counterpart.

In Hall's chronicle much good matter is quite marred with indenture English. Ascham's Schoolm.

The critic to his grief will find
How firmly these indentures bind. Swift.

INDEPENDENCE. n. f. [independance, Fr.]INDEPENDENCY. n. f. [in and dependence.]

Freedom; exemption from reliance or control; state over which none has power.

Dreams may give us some idea of the great excellency of a human soul, and some intimations of its independency on matter. Addison.

Let fortune do her worst, whatever she makes us lose, as long as she never makes us lose our honesty and our independence. Pope.

Give me, I cry'd, enough for me,
My bread and independency;
So bought an annual rent or two,
And liv'd just as you see I do. Pope.

INDEPENDENT. adj. [independant, Fr. in and dependent.]

1. Not depending; not supported by any other; not relying on another; not controlled. It is used with on, of, or from, before the object; of which on seems most proper, since we say to depend on, and consequently dependent on.

Creation must needs infer providence, and God's making the world irrefragably proves that he governs it too; or that a being of dependent nature remains nevertheless independent upon him in that respect. St. Alb.

Since all princes of independent governments are in a state of nature, the world never was without men in that state. Locke.

The town of St. Gaul is a Protestant republick, independent of the abbot, and under the protection of the cantons. Addison.

2. Not relating to any thing else, as to a superior cause or power.

The consideration of our understanding, which is an incorporeal substance independent from matter; and the contemplation of our own bodies, which have all the stamps and characters of excellent contrivance; these alone do very easily guide us to the wise Author of all things. Bentley.

INDEPENDENT. n. f. One who in religious affairs holds that every congregation is a complete church, subject to no superior authority.

We shall, in our sermons take occasion to justify such passages in our liturgy as have been unjustly quarrelled at by presbyterians, independents, or other puritan sectaries. Sanderson.

A very famous Independent minister was head of a college in those times. Addison's Spectator.

INDEPENDENTLY. adv. [from independent.]

Without reference to other things.

Dispose lights and shadows, without finishing every thing independently the one of the other. Dryden.

INDESE'RT. n. f. [in and desert.] Want of merit. This is an useful word, but not much received.

Those who were once looked on as his equals, are apt to think the fame of his merit a reflection on their own indeseerts. Addison.

Glass is so compact and firm a body, that it is indestructible by art or nature. Boyle.

INDETERMINABLE. adj. [in and determi- nable.] Not to be fixed; not to be defined or settled.

There is not only obscurity in the end, but beginning of the world; that, as its period is inscrutable, so is its nativity indeterminable. Brown.

INDETERMINATE. adj. [indetermini, Fr.]

in and determinate.] Unfixed; not defined; indefinite.

The rays of the same colour were by turns transmitted at one thickness, and reflected at another thickness, for an indeterminate number of successions. Newton's Opticks.

INDETERMINATELY. adv. [in and determinately.] Indefinitely; not in any settled manner.

His perspicacity discerned the loadstone to respect the North, when ours beheld it indeterminately. Brown.

The depth of the hold is indeterminately expressed in the description. Arbutnot on Colours.

INDETERMINED. adj. [in and determined.]

Unsettled; unfixed.

We should not amuse ourselves with floating words of indetermined signification, which we can use in several senses to serve a turn. Locke.

INDETERMINATION. n. f. [in and determination.] Want of determination; want of fixed or stated direction.

By contingents I understand all things which may be done, and may not be done, may happen, or may not happen, by reason of the indetermination or accidental concurrence of the causes. Bramhall.

INDEVO'TION. n. f. [indevotion, Fr. in and devoti.] Want of devotion; irreligion.

Let us make the church the theatre of our penitence, as of our faults; deprecate our former indevotion, and, by an exemplary reverence, redress the scandal of prophaneness. Decay of Piety.

INDEVOUT. adj. [indevot, Fr. in and devot.]

Not devout; not religious; irreligious.

He prays much; yet curses more; whilst he is meek, but indevout. Decay of Piety.

INDEX. n. f. [Latin.]

1. The discoverer; the pointer out.

Tastes are the indexes of the different qualities of plants, as well as of all sorts of aliment. Arbutnot.
That which was once the index to point out all virtues, does now mark out that part of the world where the least of them resides. Decay of Piety.

2. The hand that points to any thing, as to the hour or way.

They have no more inward self-consciousness of what they do or suffer than the index of a watch, of the hour it points to. Bentley.

3. The table of contents to a book.

In such indexes, although small
To their subsequent volumes, there is seen
The baby figure of the giant man's
Of things to come, at large. Shakespeare.

If a book has no index or good table of contents, 'tis very useful to make one as you are reading it, and in your index to take notice only of parts new to you. Watts.

INDEXT'E'RTY. n. f. [in and dexterity.]

Want of dexterity; want of readiness; want of handiness; clumsiness; awkwardness.

The indexterity of our consumption-curers demonstrates their dimness in beholding its causes. Harvey.

INDIAN Arrow-root. n. f. [marcantha, Lat.]

A root.

A sovereign remedy for the bite of wasps, and the poison of the manchineel tree. This root the Indians apply to extract the venom of their arrows. Miller.

INDIAN Cress. n. f. [acri viola, Lat.]

A plant.

INDIAN Fig. n. f. [opuntia, Latin.]

A plant.

ing; pointing out; that which directs what is to be done in any disease.

7. INDICATE. v. a. [indico, Latin.]

1. To show; to point out.
2. [In physick.] To point out a remedy. See INDICATION.

INDICA'TION. n. f. [indication, French; indicatio, from indico, Latin.]

1. Mark; token; sign; note; symptom. The frequent stops they make in the most convenient places, are a plain indication of their weariness.

We think that our successes are a plain indication of the divine favour towards us.

2. [In physic.] Indication is of four kinds: vital, preservative, curative, and palliative, as it directs what is to be done to continue life, cutting off the cause of an approaching distemper, curing it whilst it is actually present, or lessening its effects, or taking off some of its symptoms before it can be wholly removed.

The deprivation of the instruments of mastication is a natural indication of a liquid diet.

3. Discovery made; intelligence given.

If a person that had a fair estate in reversion, should be assured by some skillful physician, that he would inevitably fall into a disease that would totally deprive him of his understanding and ty; if, I say, upon a certain belief of this indication, the man should appear overjoyed at the news, would not all that saw him conclude that the distemper had seized him?

4. Explanation; display.

These be the things that govern nature principally, and without which you cannot make any true analysis, and indication of the proceedings of nature.

INDI'CATIVE. adj. [indicativus, Lat.]

1. Showing; informing; pointing out.
2. [In grammar.] A certain modification of a verb, expressing affirmation or indication.

The verb is formed in a certain manner to affirm, deny, or interrogate; which formation, from the principal use of it, is called the indicative mood.

INDI'CATIVELY. adv. [from indicative.]

In such a manner as shows or betokens. These images, formed in the brain, are indicatively of the same species with those of sense.

INDICR. See INDITE, and its derivatives

INDI'CTION. n. f. [indiction, Fr. indico, Lat.]

1. Declaration; proclamation. After a legation ad res repetendas, and a refusal, and a denunciation and indiction of a war, the war is left at large.

2. [In chronology.] The indiction, instituted by Constantine the Great, is properly a cycle of tributes, orderly disposed, for fifteen years, and by it accounts of that kind were kept. Afterwards, in memory of the great victory obtained by Constantine over Mezentius, 8 Cal. Oct. 312, by which an entire freedom was given to Christianity, the council of Nice, for the honour of Constantine, ordained that the accounts of years should be no longer kept by the Olympiads, which till that time had been done; but that, instead thereof, the indiction should be made use of, by which to reckon and date their years, which hath its epocha A. D. 313, Jan. 1.

INDI'FFERENCE. } n. f. [indifference, Fr. indifferentia, Latin.]

1. Neutrality; suspension; equipoise or freedom from motives on either side.

In choice of committees it is better to chuse indifferent persons, than to make an indifference by putting in those that are strong on both sides.

By an equal indifference for all truth, I mean, not loving it as such, before we know it to be true.

A perfect indifference in the mind, not determinable by its last judgment, would be as great an imperfection as the want of indifference to act, or not to act, till determined by the will.

Those who would borrow light from expositors, consult either only those who have the good luck to be thought sound and orthodox, avoiding those of different sentiments; or else with indifference look into notes of all commentators.

2. Impartiality.

Read the book with indifference and judgment, and thou canst not but greatly commend it.

3. Negligence; want of affection; unconcernedness.

Indifference cannot but be criminal; when it is conversant about objects which are so far from being of an indifferent nature, that they are of the highest importance.

A place which we must pass through, not only with the indifference of strangers, but with the vigilance of those who travel through the country of an enemy.

Indifference, clad in wisdom's guise,
All fortitude of mind supplies;
For how can stony bowels melt,
In those who never pity felt?

He will let you know he has got a clap with as much indifference as he would a piece of public news.

The people of England should be frightened with the French king and the Pretender once a-year: the want of observing this necessary precept, has produced great indifference in the vulgar.

4. State in which no moral or physical reason preponderates; state in which there is no difference.

The choice is left to our discretion, except a principal bond of some higher duty remove the indifference that such things have in themselves: their indifference is removed, if we take away our own liberty.

INDI'FFERENT. adj. [indifferent, Fr. indifferens, Lat.]

1. Neutral; not determined on either side.

Doth his majesty
Incline to it or no?
—He seems indifferent.

Being indifferent, we should receive and embrace opinions according as evidence gives the attestation of truth.

Let guilt or fear
Disturb man's rest; Cato knows neither of them:
Indifferent in his choice to sleep or die.

2. Unconcerned; inattentive; regardless.

One thing was all to you, and your fondness made you indifferent to every thing else.
It was a law of Salon, that any person who, in the civil commotions of the republic, remained neuter, or an indifferent spectator of the contending parties, should be condemned to perpetual banishment.

But how indifferent soever man may be to eternal happiness, yet surely to eternal misery none can be indifferent.

3. Not to have such difference as that the one is for its own sake preferable to the other.

The nature of things indifferent is neither to be commanded nor forbidden, but left free and arbitrary.

Customs, which of themselves are indifferent in other kingdoms became exceedingly evil in this realm, by reason of the inconveniences which followed thereupon.

Though at first it was free, and in my choice whether or no I should publish these discourses; yet, the publication being once resolved, the dedication was not so indifferent.

This I mention only as my conjecture, it being indifferent to the matter which way the learned shall determine.

4. Impartial; disinterested.

Metcalf was partial to none, but indifferent to all; a matter for the whole, and a father to every one.

I am a most poor woman, and a stranger,
Born out of your dominions; having here
No judge indifferent, and no more assurance
Of equal friendship and proceeding.

There can hardly be an indifferent trial had between the king and the subject, or between party and party, by reason of this general kindred and consanguinity.

5. Passable; having mediocrity; of a middling state; neither good nor worst. This is an improper and colloquial use, especially when applied to persons.

Some things admit of mediocrity:
A counsellor, or pleader at the bar,
May want Messala's powerful eloquence,
Or be less read than deep Cassellius;
Yet this indifferent lawyer is esteem'd.
Who would excel, when few can make a test,
Betwixt indifferent writing and the best?

There is not one of these subjects that would not sell a very indifferent paper, could I think of gratifying the publick by such mean and base methods.

6. In the same sense it has the force of an adverb.

I am myself indifferent honest; but yet I could accuse me of such things, that it were better that my mother had not borne me.

INDI'FFERENTLY. adv. [indifferenter, Latin.]

1. Without distinction; without preference.

Whiteness is a mean between all colours, having itself indifferently to them all, so as with equal facility to be tinged with any of them.

Suspend your indignation against my brother, till you derive better testimony of his intent. Shakefp.

From those officers, warm with indignation at the insolences of that vile rabble, came words of great contempt. Clarendon.

But keep this swelling indignation down,
And let your cooler reason now prevail. Rowe.

2. The anger of a superiour.
There was great indignation against Israel. 2 Kings.

3. The effect of anger.
If heav'n's have any grievous plague in store,
Let them hurl down their indignation
On thee, thou troubler of the world. Shakefp.

INDIGNITY. n. f. [indignitas, from indignus, Lat. indignité, Fr.] Contumely; contemptuous injury; violation of right accompanied with insult.

Bishops and prelates could not but have bleeding hearts to behold a person of so great place and worth constrained to endure so foul indignities. Hooker.

No emotion of passion transported me, by the indignity of his carriage, to any thing unbecoming myself. King Charles.

Man be made, and for him built Magnificent this world, and earth his seat,
Him lord pronounc'd; and, O indignity!
Subjected to his service angel-wings,
And flaming ministers, to watch and tend
Their earthly charge. Milton.

He does not see how that mighty passion for the church can well consist with those indignities and that contempt men bestow on the clergy. Swift.

To more exalted glories born,
Thy mean indignities I scorn. Pattison.

INDIGO. n. f. [indicum, Lat.] A plant, by the Americans called anil. In the middle of the flower is the style, which afterwards becomes a jointed pod, containing one cylindrical seed in one partition, from which indigo is made, which is used in dying for a blue colour. Miller.

INDISCRIMINATELY. adv. [from indiscriminate.] Without distinction.

Others use defamatory discourse purely for love of talk; whose speech, like a flowing current, bears away indiscriminately whatever lies in its way.

Government of the Tongue.

Liquors, strong of acid salts, destroy the blueveils of the infusion of our wood; and liquors, indiscriminately, that abound with sulphureous salts, restore it.

Boyle.

INDISPENSABLE. adj. [French.] Not to be remitted; not to be spared; necessary.

Rocks, mountains, and caverns, against which these exceptions are made, are of indispensable use and necessity, as well to earth as to man.

Woodward.

INDISPENSABLENESS. n. f. [from indispensable.] State of not being to be spared; necessity.

INDISPENSABLY. adv. [from indispensable.] Without dispensation; without remission; necessarily.

Every one must look upon himself as indispensably obliged to the practice of duty.

Addison.

INDISPOSE. v. a. [indisposer, Fr.]

1. To make unfit: with for.

Nothing can be reckoned good or bad to us in this life, any farther than it prepares or indisposes us for the enjoyment of another.

Atterbury.

2. To disincline; to make averse: with to.

It has a strange efficacy to indispose the heart to religion.

South's Sermons.

3. To disorder; to disqualify for its proper functions.

The soul is not now hindered in its actions by the distemperature of indisposed organs.

Glanville.

4. To disorder slightly with regard to health.

Though it weakened, yet it made him rather indisposed than sick, and did no ways disable him from studying.

Walton.

5. To make unfavourable; with towards.

The king was sufficiently indisposed towards the persons or the principles of Calvin's disciples.

Clarendon.

INDISPOSEDNESS. n. f. [from indisposed.] State of unfitness or disinclination; disordered state.

It is not any innate harshness in piety that renders the first essays of it unpleasant; that is owing only to the indisposedness of our own hearts.

Decay of Piety.

INDISPOSITION. n. f. [indisposition, Fr. from indispose.]

1. Disorder of health; tendency to sickness; slight disease.

The king did complain of a continual infirmity of body, yet rather as an indisposition in health, than any set sickness.

Hayward.

I have known a great fleet lose great occasions, by an indisposition of the admiral, while he was neither well enough to exercise, nor ill enough to leave the command.

Temple.

Wisdom is still looking forward, from the first indispositions into the progress of the disease.

L'Estrange.

His life seems to have been prolonged beyond its natural term, under those indispositions which hung upon the latter part of it.

Addison's Freeholder.

2. Disinclination; dislike; with to or towards.

The indisposition of the church of Rome to reform herself, must be stay unto us from performing our duty to God.

Hooker.

The mind, by every degree of affected unbelief, contracts more and more of a general indisposition towards believing.

Atterbury.

INDISPUTABLE. adj. [in and disputable.]

Uncontrovertible; incontestable; evident; certain.

There is no maxim in politics more indisputable, than that a nation should have many honours to reserve for those who do national services.

The apostle asserts a clear indisputable conclusion, which could admit of no question.

Rogers.

INDISPUTABLENESS. n. f. [from indisputable.] The state of being indisputable; certainty; evidence.

INDISPUTABLY. adv. [from indisputable.] 1. Without controversy; certainly; evidently.

The thing itself is questionable, nor is it indisputably certain what death she died.

Brown.

2. Without opposition.

They questioned a duty that had been indisputably granted to so many preceding kings.

Hewel.

INDISSOLVABLE. adj. [in and dissolvable.]

1. Indissoluble; not separable as to its parts.

Metals, corroded with a little acid, turn into rust, which is an earth tasteless and indissoluble in water; and this earth, imbibed with more acid, becomes a metallick salt.

Newton.

2. Obligatory; not to be broken; binding for ever.

Deposition and degradation are without hope of any remission, and therefore the law styles them an indissoluble bond; but a censure, a dissolvable bond.

Ayliffe's Parergon.

INDISSOLUBILITY. n. f. [indissolubilité, Fr. from indissoluble.]

1. Resistance to a dissolving power; firmness; stableness.

What hoops hold this mass of matter in so close a pressure together, from whence steel has its firmness, and the parts of a diamond their hardness and indissolubility.

Locke.

2. Perpetuity of obligation.

INDISSOLUBLE. adj. [indissoluble, Fr. indissolubilis, Lat. in and dissolvable.]

1. Resisting all separation of its parts; firm; stable.

When common gold and lead are mingled, the lead may be severed almost unaltered; yet if, instead of the gold, a tantillum of the red elixir be mingled with the saturn, their union will be so indissoluble, that there is no possible way of separating the dissolved elixir from the fixed lead.

Boyle.

2. Binding for ever: subsisting for ever; not to be loosed.

Far more comfort it were for us, to be joined with you in bands of indissoluble love and amity, to live as if our persons being many, our souls were but one.

Hooker.

There is the supreme and indissoluble consanguinity between men, of which the heathen poet saith we are all his generation.

Bacon's Holy War.

They might justly wonder, that men so taught, so obliged to be kind to all, should behave themselves so contrary to such heavenly instructions, such indissoluble obligations.

Scutb.

INDISSOLUBLENESS. n. f. [from indissoluble.] Indissolubility; resistance to separation of parts.

Adam, though consisting of a composition intrinsically dissolvable, might have held, by the Divine Will, a state of immortality and indissolubleness of his composition.

Hale.

INDISSOLUBLY. adj. [from indissoluble.]

1. In a manner resisting all separation.

On they move

Indissolubly firm; nor obvious hill,
Nor straitning vale, nor wood, nor stream divide
Their perfect ranks.

Milton.

The remaining ashes, by a further degree of fire, may be indissolubly united into glass.

Boyle.

They willingly unite,

Indissolubly firm: from Dubris south

To northern Oracles,

Phillips.

2. For ever obligatorily.

INDISTINCT. adj. [indistinct, Fr. in and distinctus, Lat.]

1. Not plainly marked; confused.

That which is now a horse, even with a thought, The rack dissolves, and makes it indistinct?

As water is in water.

Shakespeare.

She warbled in her throat,
And tun'd her voice to many a merry note:
But indistinct, and neither sweet nor clear.

Dryden.

When we speak of the infinite divisibility of matter, we keep a very clear and distinct idea of division and divisibility; but when we come to parts too small for our senses, our ideas of these little bodies become obscure and indistinct.

Watts.

2. Not exactly discerning.

We throw out our eyes for brave Othello,
Ev'n till we make the main and th' aerial blue
An indistinct regard.

Shakespeare.

INDISTINCTION. n. f. [from indistinct.]

1. Confusion; uncertainty.

The indistinction of many of the same name, or the misapplication of the act of one unto another, hath made some doubt.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

2. Omission of discrimination; indiscriminate.

An indistinction of all persons, or equality of all orders, is far from being agreeable to the will of God.

Spratt.

INDISTINCTLY. adv. [from indistinct.]

1. Confusedly; uncertainly; without definiteness or discrimination.

In its sides it was bounded distinctly, but on its ends confusedly and indistinctly, the light there vanishing by degrees.

Newton's Optics.

2. Without being distinguished.

Making trial thereof, both the liquors soaked indistinctly through the bowl.

Brown's Vulgar Err.

INDISTINCTNESS. n. f. [from indistinct.]

Confusion; uncertainty; obscurity.

There is an unevenness or indistinctness in the style of these places, concerning the origin and form of the earth.

Burnet's Theory.

Old age makes the cornea and coat of the crystalline humour grow flatter: so that the light, for want of sufficient refraction, will not converge to the bottom of the eye, but beyond it, and by consequence, paint in the bottom of the eye, a confused picture; and according to the indistinctness of this picture, the object will appear confused.

Newton.

INDISTURBANCE. n. f. [in and disturb.]

Calmness; freedom from disturbance.

What is called by the Stoicks apathy, and by the Scepticks indisturbance, seems all but to mean, great tranquillity of mind.

Temple.

INDIVIDUAL. adj. [individu, individuel, Fr. individuus, Latin.]

1. Separate from others of the same species; single; numerically one.

Neither is it enough to consult, secundum genera, what the kind and character of the person should be; for the most judgment is shewn in the choice of individuals.

Bacon.

They present us with images more perfect than the life, in any individual.

Dryden's Dufresnoy.

Must the whole man, amazing thought! return
To the cold marble, or contracted urn!

And never shall those particles agree,

That were in life this individual he?

Prior.

Know all the good that individuals find,

Lies in three words, health, peace, and competence.

Pope.

We see each circumstance of art and individual of nature summoned together by the extent and fecundity of his imagination.

Pope's Preface to the Iliad.

It would be wise in them, as individual and private mortals, to look back a little upon the storms they have raised, as well as those they have escaped.

Swift.

The object of any particular idea is called an individual; so Peter is an individual man, London is an individual city.

Watts.

2. Undivided; not to be parted or disjoined.

To give thee being, I lent
Out of my side to thee, nearest my heart,
Substantial life, to have thee by my side
Henceforth an individual solace dear.

Milton.

Long

Long eternity shall greet our bliss
With an individual kiss.

Milton.

Under his great viceroy reign abide United, as one individual soul,
For ever happy.

Milton.

INDIVIDUALITY. n. f. [from individual.]
Separate or distinct existence.

He would tell his instructor, that all men were not singular: that individuality could hardly be predicated of any man; for it was commonly said, that a man is not the same he was, and that madmen are beside themselves.

Arbutnot.

INDIVIDUALLY. adv. [from individual.]
1. With separate or distinct existence: numerically.

How should that subsist solitarily by itself, which hath no substance, but individually the very same whereby others subsist with it?

Hooker.

2. Not separably; incommunicably.

I dare not pronounce him omniscious, that being an attribute individually proper to the godhead, and incommunicable to any created substance.

Hakewill.

To INDIVIDUATE. v. a. [from individuus, Latin.] To distinguish from others of the same species; to make single.

Life is individuated into infinite numbers, that have their distinct sense and pleasure.

More.

No man is capable of translating poetry, who, besides a genius to that art, is not a master both of his mother's language and of his own; nor must we understand the language only of the poet, but his particular turn of thought and expression, which are the characters that distinguish and individuate him from all other writers.

Dryden.

INDIVIDUATION. n. f. [from individuate.]
That which makes an individual.

What is the principle of individuation? Or what is it that makes any one thing the same as it was before?

Watts.

INDIVIDUITY. n. f. [from individuus, Lat.]
The state of being an individual; separate existence.

INDIVINITY. n. f. [in and divinity.]
Want of divine power. Not in use.

How openly did the oracle betray his indivinity unto Cælius, who being ruined by his amphibology, and expostulating with him, received no higher answer than the excuse of his impotency?

Brown.

INDIVISIBILITY. n. f. [from indivi- INDIVISIBLENESS. s. f. file.] State in which no more division can be made.

A peltle and mortar will as soon bring any particle of matter to indivisibility as the acutest thought of a mathematician.

Locke.

INDIVISIBLE. adj. [indivisible, Fr. in and divisible.] What cannot be broken into parts; so small as that it cannot be smaller; having reached the last degree of divisibility.

By atom, no body will imagine we intend to express a perfect indivisible, but only the least sort of natural bodies.

Digby.

Here is but one indivisible point of time observed, but one action performed; yet the eye cannot comprehend at once the whole object.

Dryden.

INDIVISIBLY. adv. [from indivisible.]
So as it cannot be divided.

INDOCIBLE. adj. [in and docible.] Unteachable; insusceptible of instruction.

INDOCIL. adj. [indocile, Fr. indocilis, Latin.] Unteachable; incapable of being instructed.

These certainly are the fools in the text, indocil, intractable fools, whose stolidity can baffle all arguments, and is proof against demonstration itself.

Bentley's Sermons.

INDOCILITY. n. f. [indocilité, Fr. in and docility.] Unteachableness; refusal of instruction.

To INDOCTRINATE. v. a. [endoctriner, old French.] To instruct; to tincture with any science, or opinion.

Under a master that discoursed excellently, and took much delight in indoctrinating his young unexperienced favourite, Buckingham had obtained a quick conception of speaking very gracefully and pertinently.

Clarendon.

They that never peep beyond the common belief, in which their easy understandings were at first in- doctrinated, are strongly assured of the truth of their receptions.

Glanville.

INDOCTRINATION. n. f. [from indoctri- nate.] Instruction; information.

Although postulates are very accommodable unto junior indoctrinations, yet are these authorities not to be embraced beyond the minority of our intellectuals.

Brown.

INDOLENCE. n. f. [in and doleo, Latin;
INDOLENCY. s. f. indolence, French.]

1. Freedom from pain.

As there must be indolency where there is happiness, so there must not be indigency.

Burnet.

I have ease, if it may not rather be called indolence.

Hough.

2. Laziness; inattention; listlessness.

Let Epicurus give indolency as an attribute to his gods, and place in it the happiness of the blest: the Divinity which we worship has given us not only a precept against it, but his own example to the contrary.

Dryden.

The Spanish nation, roused from their ancient indolence and ignorance, seem now to improve trade.

Bolingbroke.

INDOLENT. adj. [French.]

1. Free from pain. So the chirurgeons speak of an indolent tumour.

2. Careless; lazy; inattentive; listless.

Ill fits a chief

To waste long nights in indolent repose.

Pope's Iliad.

INDOLENTLY. adv. [from indolent.]

1. With freedom from pain.

2. Carelessly; lazily; inattentively; list-lessly.

While lull'd by sound, and undisturb'd by wit,
Calm and serene you indolently sit.

Addison.

To INDOW. v. a. [indotare, Latin.] To portion; to enrich with gifts, whether of fortune or nature. See ENDOW.

INDRAUGHT. n. f. [in and draught.]

1. An opening in the land into which the sea flows.

Ebbes and floods there could be none, when there was no indraughts, bays, or gulphs to receive a flood.

Raleigh.

2. Inlet; passage inwards.

Navigable rivers are indraughts to attain wealth.

Bacon.

To INDRENCH. v. a. [from drench.] To soak; to drown.

My hopes lie drown'd; in many fathoms deep
They lie indrench'd.

INDUBIOUS. adj. [in and dubious.] Not doubtful; not suspecting; certain.

Hence appears the vulgar vanity of reposing an in- dubious confidence in those antipestilential spirits.

Harvey.

INDUBITABLE. adj. [indubitabilis, Lat.
indubitable, Fr. in and dubitable.] Undoubted; unquestionable; evident; certain in appearance; clear; plain.

When general observations are drawn from so many particulars as to become certain and indubitable, these are jewels of knowledge.

Watts on the Mind.

INDUBITABLY. adv. [from indubitable.]
Undoubtedly; unquestionably.

If we transport these proportions from audible to visible objects, there will indubitably result from either a graceful and harmonious contentment.

Wotton's Architecture.

The patriarchs were indubitably invested with both these authorities.

Spratt.

I appeal to all sober judges, whether our souls may be only a mere echo from clashing atoms; or rather indubitably must proceed from a spiritual substance.

Bentley.

INDUBITATE. adj. [indubitatus, Latin.]
Unquestioned; certain; apparent; evident.

If he stood upon his own title of the house of Lancaster, he knew it was condemned by parliament, and tended directly to the disinherison of the line of York, held then the indubitate heirs of the crown.

Bacon's Henry VII.

I have been tempted to wonder how, among the jealousies of state and court, Edgar Atheling could subsist, being then the apparent and indubitate heir of the Saxon line.

Wotton.

To INDUCE. v. a. [induire, Fr. induco,
Lat.]

1. To influence to any thing; to persuade:
of persons.

The self-same argument in this kind, which doth but induce the vulgar sort to like, may constrain the wiser to yield.

Hooker.

This lady, albeit she was furnished with many excellent endowments both of nature and education;
yet would she never be induced to entertain marriage with any.

Hayward.

Desire with thee still longer to converse

Induc'd me.

Bacon.

Let not the covetous design of growing rich in- duce you to ruin your reputation, but rather satisfy yourself with a moderate fortune; and let your thoughts be wholly taken up with acquiring to yourself a glorious name.

Dryden.

2. To produce by persuasion or influence:
of things.

Let the vanity of the times be restrained, which the neighbourhood of other nations have induced;
we strive apace to exceed our pattern.

Bacon.

As belief is absolutely necessary to all mankind,
the evidence for inducing it must be of that nature
as to accommodate itself to all species of men.

Forbes.

3. To offer by way of induction, or consequential reasoning.

They play much upon the simile, or illustrative argumentation; to induce their enthymemes unto the people, and take up popular conceits.

Brown.

4. To inculcate; to enforce.

This induces a general change of opinion, concerning the person or party like to be obeyed by the greatest or strongest part of the people.

Temple.

5. To cause extrinsically; to produce; to effect.

Sour things induce a contraction in the nerves placed in the mouth of the stomach, which is a great cause of appetite.

Bacon.

Acidity, as it is not the natural state of the animal fluids; but induced by aliment, is to be cured by aliment with the contrary qualities.

Arbutnot.

6. To introduce; to bring into view.

To exprobrate their stupidity, he induceth the providence of storks: now, if the bird had been unknown, the illustration had been obscure, and the exprobration not so proper.

Brown.

The poet may be seen inducing his personages in the first Iliad, where he discovers their humours, interests, and designs.

Pope.

7. To bring on; to superinduce; to effect gradually.

Schism is marked out by the apostle as a kind of petrifying crime, which induces that induration to which the fearful expectation of wrath is consequent.

Decay of Piety.

INDUCEMENT. n. f. [from induce.] Mover to any thing; that which allures or persuades to any thing.

The former inducements do now much more prevail, when the very thing hath ministered further reason.

Hooker.

Many inducements, besides Scripture, may lead me to that, which if Scripture be against, they are of no value, yet otherwise are strongly effectual to persuade.

Hooker.

IND

IND

IND

That mov'd me to't,
Then mark th' inducement. Shakefp. Henry VIII.
He lives
Higher degree of life; inducement strong For us. Milton.
My inducement hither,
Was not at present here to bind my son. Milton.
Instances appear of oppression, to which there appears no inducement from the circumstances of the actors.
Rogers.

INDU'GER. n. f. [from induce.] A persuader; one that influences.

To INDU'CT. v. a. [inductus, Latin.]
1. To introduce; to bring in.
The ceremonies in the gathering were first in- duced by the Venetians. Sandys's Travels.
2. To put into actual possession of a benefice.
If a person thus instituted, though not inducted,
takes a second benefice, it shall make the first void.
Ayliffe's Parergon.

INDU'CTION. n. f. [induction, Fr. inductio,
Latin.]
1. Introduction; entrance; anciently preface.
These promises are fair, the parties sure,
And our induction full of prosperous hope. Shakefp.
2. Induction is when, from several particular propositions, we infer one general: as, the doctrine of the Socinians cannot be proved from the gospels, it cannot be proved from the acts of the apostles, it cannot be proved from the epistles, nor the book of revelations; therefore it cannot be proved from the New Testament. Watts's Logick.
The inquisition by induction is wonderful hard;
for the things reported are full of fables, and new experiments can hardly be made but with extreme caution. Bacon.
Mathematical things are only capable of clear demonstration: conclusions in natural philosophy are proved by induction of experiments, things moral by moral arguments, and matters of fact by credible testimony. Tillotson.
Although the arguing from experiments and observations by induction be no demonstration of general conclusions, yet it is the best way of arguing which the nature of things admits of, and may be looked upon as so much the stronger by how much the induction is more general: and if no exception occur from phenomena, the conclusion may be general. Newton's Opt.
He brought in a new way of arguing from in- duction, and that grounded upon observation and experiments. Baker.
3. The act or state of taking possession of an ecclesiastical living.

INDU'CTIVE. adj. [from induct.]
1. Leading; persuasive: with to.
A brutish vice,
Inductive mainly to the sin of Eve. Milton.
2. Capable to infer or produce.
Abatements may take away infallible conclusency in these evidences of fact, yet they may be probable and inductive of credibility, though not of science.
Hale's Origin of Mankind.
3. Proceeding not by demonstration, but induction.

To INDU'E. v. a. [induo, Latin.]
1. To invest; to clothe.
One first matter all,
Indu'd with various forms. Milton.
2. It seems sometimes to be, even by good writers, confounded with eudow or indow, to furnish or enrich with any quality or excellence.
The angel, by whom God indu'd the waters of Bethesda with supernatural virtue, was not seen; yet the angel's presence was known by the waters.
Hosker.
His pow'rs, with dreadful strength indu'd.
Chapman.

To INDU'LGE. v. a. [indulgeo, Latin.]
1. To encourage by compliance.
The lazy glutton safe at home will keep;
Indulge his sloth, and fatten with his sleep. Dryden.
2. To fondle; to favour; to gratify with concession; to foster. If the matter of indulgence be a single thing, it has with before it; if it be a habit, it has in: as, he indulged himself with a draught of wine;
and, he indulged himself in shameful drunk- enness.
A mother was wont to indulge her daughters with dogs, squirrels, or birds; but then they must keep them well. Locke.
To live like those that have their hope in another life, implies that we indulge ourselves in the gratifications of this life very sparingly. Atterbury.
3. To grant not of right but favour.
Ancient privileges, indulged by former kings to their people, must not without high reason, be revoked by their successors. Taylor.
The virgin ent'ring bright, indulg'd the day
To the brown cave, and brush'd the dreams away.
Dryden.
But since among mankind so few there are,
Who will conform to philosophick fare,
This much I will indulge thee for thy ease,
And mingle something of our times to please. Dryd.
My friend, indulge one labour more,
And seek Atreides. Pope's Odyssey.
Yet, yet a moment, one dim ray of light
Indulge, dread chaos and eternal night! Pope.

To INDU'LGE. v. n. [A Latinism not in use.] To be favourable; to give indulgence: with to.
He must not, by indulging to one sort of reprove-able discourse himself, defeat his endeavours against the rest. Gov. Tongue.

INDULGENCE. n. f. [indulgence, Fr.
INDULGENCY. n. f. from indulge.]
1. Fondness; fond kindness.
Restraint she will not brook;
And left to herself, if evil thence ensue,
She first his weak indulgence will accuse. Milton.
The glories of our idle,
Which yet like golden ore, unripe in beds,
Expect the warm indulgency of heaven. Dryden.
2. Forbearance; tenderness: opposite to rigour.
They err, that through indulgence to others, or fondness to any sin in themselves, substitute for repentance any thing less. Hammond on Fundamentals.
In known images of life, I guess
The labour greater, as th' indulgence less. Pope.
3. Favour granted; liberality.
If all these gracious indulgencies are without any effect on us, we must perish in our own folly. Rogers.
4. Grant of the church of Rome, not defined by themselves.
Thou, that giv'st whores indulgences to sin,
I'll canvass thee. Shakefp. Henry VI.
Indulgences, dispensers, pardons, bulls,
The sport of winds. Milton.
In purgatory, indulgences, and supererogation, the assertors seem to be unanimous in nothing but profit.
Decay of Piety.
Leo X. is deservedly infamous for his base prostitution of indulgences. Atterbury.

INDU'LGENT. adj. [indulgent, Fr. indul- gens, Latin.]
1. Kind; gentle; liberal.
God has done all for us that the most indulgent
Creator could do for the work of his hands. Rogers.
2. Mild; favourable.
Hereafter such in thy behalf shall be
Th' indulgent censure of posterity. Waller.
3. Gratifying; favouring; giving way to:
with of.
The feeble old, Indulgent of their ease. Dryd.

INDU'LGENTLY. adv. [from indulgent.]
Without severity; without censure; without self reproach; with indulgence.

He that not only commits some act of sin, but lives indulgently in it, is never to be counted a regenerate man. Hammond.

INDU'LT. n. f. [Ital. and French.]
INDULTO. n. f. Privilege or exemption.

To INDURATE. v. n. [induro, Latin.]
To grow hard; to harden.
Stones within the earth at first are but rude earth or clay; and so minerals come at first of juices concrete, which afterwards indurate. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
That plants and ligneous bodies may indurate under water without approachment of air, we have experiaments in corallines. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

To INDURATE. v. a.
1. To make hard.
A contracted indurated bladder is a circumstance sometimes attending on the stone, and indeed an extraordinary dangerous one. Sharp's Surgery.
2. To harden the mind; to sear the conscience.

INDURATION. n. f. [from [indurate.]
1. The state of growing hard.
This is a notable instance of condensation and induration, by burial under earth, in caves, for a long time. Bacon.
2. The act of hardening.
3. Obduracy; hardness of heart.
Schism is marked out by the apostle as a kind of petrifying crime, which induces that induration to which the fearful expectation of wrath is consequent. Decay of Piety.

INDUS'TRIOUS. adj. [industrius, Fr.
industrius, Lat.]
1. Diligent; laborious; assiduous: opposed to slothful.
Frugal and industrious men are commonly friendly to the established government. Temple.
2. Laborious to a particular end: opposite to remiss.

dustrious to seek out the truth of all things concerning the original of his own people, hath set down the testimony of the ancients truly. Spenser.
Let our just censures
Attend the true event, and put we on Industrious soldiership. Shakespeare.
His thoughts were low:
To vice industrious; but to nobler deeds
Timorous and slothful. Milton.
3. Designed; done for the purpose.
The industrious perforation of the tendons of the second joints of fingers and toes, draw the tendons of the third joints through. Mors.
Observe carefully all the events which happen either by an occasional concurrence of various causes, or by the industrious application of knowing men.
Watts on the Mind.

INDU'STRIOUSLY. adv. [from industrious.]
1. With habitual diligence; not idly.
2. Diligently; laboriously; assiduously.
Great Britain was never before united under one king, notwithstanding that the uniting had been in- dustriously attempted both by war and peace. Bacon.
3. Set for the purpose; with design.
Some friends to vice industriously defend These innocent diversions, and pretend
That I the tricks of youth too roughly blame. Dryd.
I am not under the necessity of declaring myself, and I industriously conceal my name, which wholly exempts me from any hopes and fears. Swift.

INDUSTRY. n. f. [industria, Fr. industria, Lat.] Diligence; assiduity, habitual or actual laboriousness.
The sweat of industry would dry and die,
But for the end it works to. Shakespeare's Cymb.
See the laborious bee
For little drops of honey flee,
And there with humble sweets content her industry.
Cowley.
Providence would only initiate mankind into the useful knowledge of her treasures, leaving the rest to employ our industry, that we might not live like idle loiterers. Mors.

To INEBRIATE. v. a. [inebrato, Latin.]

To intoxicate; to make drunk.

Wine sugared inebriates less than wine pure: sops in wine, quantity for quantity, inebriate more than wine of itself. Bacon.

Fish, entering far in and meeting with the fresh water, as if inebriated, turn up their bellies and are taken. Sandys.

To INEBRIATE. v. n. To grow drunk; to be inebriated.

At Constantinople, fish, that come from the Euxine sea into the fresh water, do inebriate and turn up their bellies, so as you may take them with your hand. Bacon.

INEBRIATION. n. f. [from inebriate.] Drunkenness; intoxication.

That cornelians and bloodstones may be of virtue, experience will make us grant; but not that an amethyst prevents inebriation. Brown.

INEFFABILITY. n. f. [from ineffable.] Un-speakableness.

INEFFABLE. adj. [ineffable, Fr. ineffabilis, Lat.] Unspeakable; unutterable; not to be expressed. It is used almost always in a good sense.

To whom the Son, with calm aspect, and clear, Light'ning divine, ineffable, serene! Made answer. Milton.

Reflect upon a clear, unblotted, acquitted conscience, and feed upon the ineffable comforts of the memorial of a conquered temptation. Saunders.

INEFFABLY. adv. [from ineffable.] In a manner not to be expressed.

He all his father full express'd, Ineffably into his face receiv'd. Milton.

INEFFECTIVE. adj. [ineffectif, Fr. in and effective.] That which can produce no effect; unactive; inefficient; useless.

As the body, without blood, is a dead and lifeless trunk; so is the word of God, without the spirit, a dead and ineffective letter. Taylor.

He that assures himself he never errs, will always err; and his presumption will render all attempts to inform him ineffective. Glanville.

INEFFECTUAL. adj. [in and ineffectual.] Unable to produce in proper effect; weak; wanting power.

The public reading of the Apocrypha they condemn as a thing effectual unto evil: the bare reading even of Scriptures themselves they dislike, as a thing ineffectual to do good. Hook.

The death of Patroclus, joined to the offer of Agamemnon, which of itself had proved ineffectual. Pope.

INEFFECTUALLY. adv. [from ineffectual.] Without effect.

INEFFECTUALNESS. n. f. [from ineffectual.] Inefficacy; want of power to perform the proper effect.

St. James speaks of the ineffectualness of some men's devotion; Ye ask, and receive not, because ye ask amiss. Wake.

INEFFICACIOUS. adj. [inefficax, Fr. in and efficax, Latin.] Unable to produce effects; weak; feeble. Ineffectual rather denotes an actual failure; and inefficacious, an habitual impotence to any effect.

Is not that better than always to have the rod in hand, and, by frequent use, misapply and render inefficacious this useful remedy? Locke.

INEFFICACY. n. f. [in and efficacia, Lat.] Want of power; want of effect.

INELEGANCE. } n. f. [from inelegant.]

What order, so contriv'd as not to mix
Tastes not well join'd inelegant, but bring Taste after taste, upheld with kindest change. Milton.

This very variety of sea and land, hill and dale, which is here reputed so inelegant and unbecoming, is indeed extremely charming and agreeable. Woodward.

2. Wanting ornament of language.
Modern critics, having never read Homer, but in low and inelegant translations, impute the meanness of the translation to the poet. Brown.

INELOQUENT. adj. [in and eloquens, Lat.] Not persuasive; not oratorical; opposite to eloquent.

INEPT. adj. [ineptus, Lat.]

1. Trifling; foolish.

The works of Nature, being neither useless nor inept, must be guided by some principle of knowledge. More.

After their various unsuccessful ways,
Their fruitless labour, and inept essays,
No cause of these appearances they'll find,
But power exerted by th' Eternal Mind. Blackmore.

3. Unfit for any purpose; useless.
When the upper and vegetative stratum was once washed off by rains, the hills would have become barren, the strata below yielding only mere sterile matter, such as was wholly inept and improper for the formation of vegetables. Woodward.

INEPTLY. adv. [ineptè, Lat.] Triflingly; foolishly; unfitly.

None of them are made foolishly or ineptly. More.

All things were at first disposed by an omniscient intellect, that cannot contrive ineptly. Glanville.

INEPTITUDE. n. f. [from ineptus, Lat.] Unfitness.

The grating and rubbing of the axes against the sockets, wherein they are placed, will cause some ineptitude or resistency to the rotation of the cylinder. Wilkins.

An omnipotent agent works infallibly and irresistibly, no ineptitude or stubbornness of the matter being ever able to hinder him. Ray on the Creat.

There is an ineptitude to motion from too great tension. Arbutnot.

INEQUALITY. n. f. [inegalité, Fr. from inequalitas and inequalis, Latin.]

1. Difference of comparative quantity.

There is so great an inequality in the the length of our legs and arms, as makes it impossible for us to walk on all four. Ray.

2. Unevenness; interchange of higher and lower parts.

The country is cut into so many hills and inequalities as renders it defensible. Addison on Italy.

The glass seemed well wrought; yet when it was quicksilvered, the reflexion discovered innumerable inequalities all over the glass. Newton's Opticks.

If there were no inequalities in the surface of the earth, nor in the seasons of the year, we should lose a considerable share of the vegetable kingdom. Bentl.

3. Disproportion to any office or purpose; state of not being adequate; inadequateness.

The great inequality of all things to the appetites of a rational soul appears from this, that in all worldly things a man finds not half the pleasure in the actual possession that he proposed in the expectation. Saunders.

4. Change of state; unlikeliness of a thing to itself; difference of temper or quality.

In some places, by the nature of the earth, and by the situation of woods and hills, the air is more unequal than in others; and inequality of air is ever an enemy to health. Bacon.

5. Difference of rank or station.

If so small inequality between man and man make in them modestly a commendable virtue, who respecting superiors as superiors, can neither speak nor stand before them without fear. Hooker.

INERRABILITY. n. f. [from inerrable.] Exemption from error; infallibility.

I cannot allow their wisdom such a completeness and inerrability as to exclude myself from judging. King Charles.

INERRABLE. adj. [in and err.] Exempt from error.

We have conviction from reason, or decisions from the inerrable and requisite conditions of sense. Brown.

Infallibility and inerrableness is assumed by the Romish church, without any inerrable ground to build it on. Hammond.

INERRABLENESS. n. f. [from inerrable.] Exemption from error.

INFAUSTING. n. s. [from infaustus, Latin.]

The act of making unlucky. An odd and inelegant word.

As the king did in some part remove the envy from himself, so he did not observe, that he did withal bring a kind of malediction and infausting upon the marriage, as an ill prognostick. Bacon.

INFEASIBLE. adj. [in and feasible.] Impracticable; not to be done.

This is so difficult and infeasible, that it may well drive modestly to despair of science. Glanville.

TO INFE'CT. v. a. [infector, Fr. infectus, Latin.]

1. To act upon by contagion; to affect with communicated qualities; to hurt by contagion; to taint; to poison; to pollute.

One of those fantastical mind infected people, that children and musicians call lovers. Sidney.

Thine eyes, sweet lady, have infected mine. Shakesp.

The nature of bad news infects the teller. Shakesp.

Ev'ry day

It would infect his speech, that if the king

Should without issue die, he'd carry it so

To make the sceptre his. Shakesp. Henry VIII.

Infected minds

To their deaf pillows will discharge their secrets. Shakesp.

She speaks poinards, and every word stabs: if her breath were as terrible as her terminations, there were no living near her; she would infect to the north star. Shakesp.

I am return'd your soldier;

No more infected with my country's love,

Than when I parted hence. Shakesp.

The love-tale

Infected Sion's daughters with like heat. Milton.

2. To fill with something hurtfully contagious.

Infected be the air whereon they ride,

And damn'd all those that trust them! Shakesp.

INFECTION. n. s. [infection, Fr. infectio, Latin.] Contagion; mischief by communication; taint; poison.

Infection is that manner of communicating a disease by some effluvia, or particles which fly off from distempered bodies, and mixing with the juices of others, occasion the same disorders as in the bodies they came from. Quincy.

What a strange infection

Is fall'n into thy ear! Shakesp. Cymbeline.

The blessed gods

Purge all infections from our air, whilst you

Do climate here. Shakesp. Winter's Tale.

Vouchsafe, diffus'd infection of a man,

For these known evils, but to give me leave,

By circumstance, to curse thy curled self. Shakesp.

Hence,

Lest that th' infection of his fortune take

Like hold on thee. Shakesp. King Lear.

The transmission or emission of the thinner and more airy parts of bodies, as in odours and infections, is, of all the rest, the most corporeal; but withal there be a number of those emissions, both wholesome and unwholesome, that give no smell at all. Bacon.

INFECTIOUS. adj. [from infect.] Contagious; influencing by communicated qualities.

The most infectious pestilence upon thee. Shakesp.

In a house,

Where the infectious pestilence did reign. Shakesp.

Some known diseases are infectious, and others are not: those that are infectious, are such as are chiefly in the spirits, and not so much in the humours, and therefore pass easily from body to body; such as pestilence and lippitudes. Bacon.

Smells may have as much power to do good as to do harm, and contribute to health as well as to diseases, which is too much felt by experience in all that are infectious, and by the operations of some poisons, that are received only by the smell. Temple.

INFE'CT.

INFECTIOUSLY. adv. [from infectious.]

Contagiously.

The will does, that is inclinable
To what infectiously itself affects.

Shakeſp.

INFECTIOUSNESS. n. s. [from infectious.]

The quality of being infectious; contagiousness.

INFECTIVE. adj. [from infect.] Having the quality of acting by contagion.

True love, well considered, hath an infective power.

Sidney.

INFECUND. n. s. [infecundus, Latin.]

Unfruitful; infertile.

How safe and agreeable a conservatory the earth is to vegetables, is manifest from their rotting, drying, or being rendered infecund in the waters, or the air; but in the earth their vigour is long preserved.

Derham's Physico-Theology.

INFECUNDITY. n. s. [infecunditas, Latin.]

Want of fertility; barrenness.

INFELICITY. n. s. [infelicité, French; infelicitas, Latin.] Unhappiness; misery; calamity.

Whatever is the ignorance and infelicity of the present state, we were made wise and happy.

Glauville.

Here is our great infelicity, that, when single words signify complex ideas, one word can never distinctly manifest all the parts of a complex idea.

Watts.

INFER. v. a. [inferer, Fr. infero, Lat.]

1. To bring on; to induce.

Vomits infer some small detriment to the lungs.

Harvey.

2. To infer is nothing but, by virtue of one proposition laid down as true, to draw in another as true, i. e. to see or suppose such a connection of the two ideas of the inferred proposition.

Locke.

Yet what thou canst attain, which best may serve
To glorify the Maker, and infer
Thee also happier, shall not be withheld Thy hearing.

Milton.

Great,

Or bright, infers not excellence: the earth
Though in comparison of heav'n so small,
Nor glistering, may of solid good contain
More plenty than the sun, that barren shines.

Milton.

One would wonder how, from so differing premises, they should all infer the same conclusion.

Decay of Piety.

They have more opportunities, than other men have of purchasing public esteem, by deserving well of mankind; and such opportunities always infer obligations.

Aitkenbury.

3. To offer; to produce. Not in use.

Full well hath Clifford played the orator,
Inferring arguments of mighty force.

Shakeſp.

INFERENCE. n. s. [inference, Fr. from infer.] Conclusion drawn from previous arguments.

Though it may chance to be right in the conclusion, it is yet unjust and mistaken in the method of inference.

Glauville.

These inferences or conclusions are the effects of reasoning, and the three propositions taken all together, are called syllogism or argument.

Watts.

INFERRIBLE. adj. [from infer.] Deducible from premised grounds.

As simple mistakes commonly beget fallacies, so men from fallacious foundations, and misapprehended mediums, erect conclusions no way inferrible from their premises.

Brown.

INFERIORITY. n. s. [inferiorité, French, from inferieur.] Lower state of dignity or value.

The language, though not of equal dignity, yet is as near approaching to it as our modern barbarism will allow; and therefore we are to rest contented with that only inferiurity, which is not possibly to be remedied.

Dryden.

INFERIOUR. adj. [inferior, Latin; inferieur, French.]

1. Lower in place.

2. Lower in station or rank of life: correlative to superiour.

Render me more equal, or perhaps Superiour, for inferiour who is free?

Milton.

3. Lower in value or excellency.

The love of liberty with life is giv'n,
And life itself th' inferiour gift of heav'n.

Dryden.

I have added some original papers of my own, which, whether they are equal or inferiour to my other poems, an author is the most improper judge of.

Dryden.

4. Subordinate.

General and fundamental truths in philosophy, religion, and human life, conduct our thoughts into a thousand inferiour and particular propositions.

Watts.

INFERIOUR. n. s. [from the adjective.]

One in a lower rank or station than another.

A great person gets more by obliging his inferiour than by disdainning him.

South.

His gigantic limbs with large embrace,
Infolds nine acres of infernal space.

Dryden's Æn.

INFERNAL Stone. n. s.

Infernal stone, or the lunar caustick, is prepared from an evaporated solution of silver, or from crystals of silver. It is a very powerful caustick, eating away the flesh and even the bones to which it is applied.

Hill's Mat. Medica.

INFERTILE. adj. [infertile, Fr. in and fertile.] Unfruitful; not productive; wanting fecundity; infecund.

Ignorance being of itself like stiff clay, an infertile soil, when pride comes to scorch and harden it, it grows perfectly impenetrable.

Government of the tongue.

INFERTILITY. n. s. [infertilité, Fr. from infertile.] Unfruitfulness; want of fertility.

The same distemperature of the air that occasioned the plague, occasioned the infertility or noxiousness of the soil, whereby the fruits of the earth became either very small, or very unwholesome.

Hale's Origin of Mankind.

TO INFEST. v. a. [infester, French; infesto, Lat.] To harass; to disturb; to plague.

Unto my feeble breast

Come gently; but not with that mighty rage
Wherewith the martial troops thou dost infest,
And hearts of greatest heroes do it enrage.

Spenser.

They ceased not, in the mean while to strengthen that part which in heart they favoured, and to infest by all means, under colour of other quarrels, their greatest adversaries in this cause.

Hooker.

Although they were a people infested, and mightily hated of all others, yet was there nothing of force to work the ruin of their state, till the time before-mentioned was expired.

Hooker.

They were no mean, distressed, calamitous persons that fled to him for refuge; but of so great quality, as was apparent that they came not thither to protect their own fortune, but to infest and invade his.

Bacon's Henry VII.

Envy, avarice, superstition, love, with the like cares and passions infest human life.

Addison.

No disease infests mankind more terrible in its symptoms and effects.

Arbutnot on Dist.

Infestred grudge, the which his mother felt,
So soon as Clarion he did behold,
His heart with vengeful malice inly swelt.

Spenser.

INFUDATION. n. s. [in and feudum, Lat.]

The act of putting one in possession of a fee or estate.

Another military provision was conventional and by tenure, upon the infudation of the tenant, and was usually called knight's service.

Hale.

INFIDEL. n. s. [infidelle, Fr. infidelis, Lat.]

An unbeliever; a miscreant; a pagan; one who rejects Christianity.

Exhorting her, if she did marry, yet not to join herself to an infidel, as in those times some widows christian had done, for the advancement of their estate in this world.

Hooker.

INFIDELITY. n. s. [infidelité, Fr. infidelitas, Latin.]

1. Want of faith.

The consideration of the divine omnipotence and infinite wisdom, and our own ignorance, are great instruments of silencing the murmurs of infidelity.

Taylor's Rule of living body.

2. Disbelief of Christianity.

One would fancy that infidels would be exempt from that single fault, which seems to grow out of the imprudent fervours of religion; but so it is, that infidelity is propagated with as much fierceness and contention, as if the safety of mankind depended upon it.

Spenser.

3. Treachery; deceit; breach of contract or trust.

The infidelities on the one part between the two sexes, and the caprices on the other, the vanities and vexations attending even the most refined delights that make up this business of life, render it silly and uncomfortable.

Spenser.

INFINITE. adj. [infini, Fr. infinitus, Lat.]

1. Unbounded; boundless; unlimited; immense; having no boundaries or limits to its nature.

Impossible it is, that God should withdraw his presence from any thing, because the very substance of God is infinite.

Hooker.

What's time, when on eternity we think

A thousand ages in that sea must sink.

Time's nothing but a word? a million

Is full as far from infinite as one.

Denham.

Thou sov'reign pow'r, whose secret will controuls
The inward bent and motion of our souls!
Why hast thou plac'd such infinite degrees
Between the cause and cure of my disease.

Prior.

When we would think of infinite space or duration, we at first make some very large idea; as perhaps of millions of ages or miles, which possibly we multiply several times.

Locke.

Even an angel's comprehensive thought
Cannot extend as far as thou hast wrought:
Our vast conceptions are by swelling brought,
Swallow'd and lost in infinite, to nought.

Dennis.

2. It is hyperbolically used for large; great.

INFINITELY. adv. [from infinite.]

Or should have spoke ere this. Shakefp. Tempest.

Whereat he inly rag'd, and as they talk'd,

Smote him into the midriff with a stone,

That beat out life. Milton.

These growing thoughts my mother soon perceiving

By words at times cast forth, inly rejoic'd. Milton.

The soldiers shout around with gen'rous rage;

He prais'd their ardor: inly pleas'd to see

His host. Dryden's Knight's Tale.

IN MATE. n. f. [in and mate.]

Inmates are those that be admitted to dwell for their money jointly with another man, though in several rooms of his mansion-house, passing in and out by one door. Corwell.

So spake the enemy of mankind, inclos'd

In serpent, inmate bad! and toward Eve

Address'd the way. Milton.

There he dies, and leaves his race

Growing into a nation; and now grown,

Subjected to a sequent king, who seeks

To stop their overgrowth, as inmate guests

Too numerous. Milton's Paradise Lost.

I N N

Home is the sacred refuge of our life;
Secur'd from all approaches but a wife;
If then we fly, the cause admits no doubt,
None but an innmate foe could force us out. Dryden.

tion, do innocuously feed upon hellebore, or rathersometimes but medically use the same. *Brown.INNOCUOUSNESS. n. s. [from innocuous.]

Harmlessness.

The blow which shakes a wall, or beats it down, and kills men, hath a greater effect on the mind than that which penetrates into a mud wall, and doth little harm; for that innocuousness of the effect makes, that, although in itself it be as great as the other, yet 'tis little observed. *Digby on Bodies.TO INNOVATE. v. a. [innovare, Fr. in-novare, Lat.]

1. To bring in something not known before.

Men pursue some few principles which they have chanced upon, and care not to innovate, which drawsunknown inconveniences. Bacon.

Former things

Are set aside like abdicated kings;

And every moment alters what is done,

And innovates some act 'till then unknown. Dryd.

Every man cannot distinguish betwixt pedantry and poetry; every man therefore is not fit to innovate.Dryden.

2. To change by introducing novelties.

From his attempts upon the civil power, he proceeds to innovate God's worship. *South.INNOVATION. n. s. [innovation, Fr. from*innovare*.] Change by the introduction of novelty.

The love of things ancient doth argue staydness;

but levity and want of experience maketh apt into innovations. *Hooker.*It were good that men in innovations would followthe example of time itself, which indeed *innovateth*greatly, but quietly and by degrees. Bacon's Essays.

Great changes may be made in a government, yet the form continue; but large intervals of time must pass between every such innovation, enough to makeit of a piece with the constitution. *Swift.INNOVATOR. n. s. [innovateur, Fr. from*innovare*.]

1. An introducer of novelties.

I attach thee as a traitorous innovator,A foe to th' publick weal. Shakesp. Coriolanus.

He that will not apply new remedies, must expect new evils; for time is the greatest innovator: and if time of course alters things to the worse, and wisdom and council shall not alter them to the better, what shall be the end? Bacon's Essays.

2. One that makes changes by introducing novelties.

He counsels them to detest and persecute all inno-vators of divine worship. *South.INNOXIOUS. adj. [innoxius, Lat.]

And in thick shelter of innum'rous boughs,Enjoy the comfort gentle sleep allows. *Pope's Odyss.TO INOCULATE. v. n. [inoculo, in and oculus,

Lat.] To propagate any plant by inserting its bud into another stock; to practise inoculation. See INOCULATION.

Nor are the ways alike in all

How to ingraft, how to inoculate. May's Virgil.

Now is the season for the budding of the orange-tree: inoculate therefore at the commencement ofthis month. Evelyn.

But various are the ways to change the state,

To plant, to bud, to graft, to inoculate. *Dryden.TO INOCULATE. v. a. To yield a bud to another stock.

Virtue cannot so inoculate our oldstock, but weshall relish of it. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

Thy stock is too much out of date,

For tender plants t' inoculate. Cleaveland.

Where lilies, in a lovely brown,

Inoculate carnation. *Cleaveland.INOCULATION. n. s. [inoculatio, Lat. from*inoculate*.]1. Inoculation is practised upon all sorts of stone fruit, and upon oranges and jas-mines. Chuse a smooth part of the stock;

then with your knife make an horizontal cut across the rind of the stock, and from the middle of that cut make a slit downwards about two inches in length in the form of a T; but be careful not to cut too deep, lest you wound the stock: then having cut off the leaf from the bud, leaving the footstalk remaining, make a cross cut about half an inch below the eye, and with your knife slit off the bud, with part of the wood to it. This done, with your knife pull off that part of the wood which was taken with the bud, observing whether the eye of the bud be left to it or not; for all those buds which lose their eyes in stripping are good for nothing:

then raising the bark of the stock, thrust the bud therein, placing it smooth between the rind and the wood of the stock;

and so having exactly fitted the bud to the stock, tie them closely round, taking care not to bind round the eye of the

bud. *Miller.*In the stem of Elaiana they all met, and came tobe ingrafted all upon one stock, most of them by ino-culation. Howel.

2. The practice of transplanting the small-pox, by infusion of the matter from ripen-ed pustules into the veins of the unin-fected, in hopes of procuring a milder sort than what frequently comes by infection.

2. Not safe.

INSECURITY. n. f. [in and security.]

1. Uncertainty; want of confidence.

It may be easily perceived with what insecurity of truth we ascribe effects, depending upon the natural period of time, unto arbitrary calculations, and such as vary at pleasure. Brown.

2. Want

2. Want of safety; danger; hazard.

The unreasonableness and presumption, the danger and desperate insecurity of those that have not so much as a thought, all their lives long, to advance so far as attrition and contrition, sorrow and resolution of amendment. Hammond.

INSEMINATION. n. f. [insemination, Fr. insemino, Latin.] The act of scattering seed on ground.

INSECUTION. n. f. [insecution, Fr. insecutio, Latin.] Pursuit. Not in use.

Not the king's own horse got more before the wheel

Of his rich chariot, that might still the insecution feel,

With the extreme hairs of his tail. Chapman's Iliad.

INSENSATE. adj. [insensé, French; insensato, Italian.] Stupid; wanting thought; wanting sensibility.

Ye be reprobates; obdurate insensate creatures. Hammond.

So fond are mortal men,

As their own ruin on themselves t' invite,

Insensate left, or to sense reprobate,

And with blindness internal struck. Milton's Agon.

INSENSIBILITY. n. f. [insensibilité, French; from insensible.]

1. Inability to perceive.

Insensibility of slow motions may be thus accounted for: motion cannot be perceived without perception of the parts of space which it left, and those which it next acquires. Glanville.

2. Stupidity; dulness of mental perception.

3. Torpor; dulness of corporal sense.

INSENSIBLE. adj. [insensible, French.]

1. Imperceptible; not discoverable by the senses.

What is that word honour? air; a trim reckoning. Who hath it? he that died a Wednesday. Doth he feel it? no. Doth he hear it? no. Is it insensible then? yea, to the dead. But will it not live with the living? no. Why? detraction will not suffer it. Shakespeare.

Two small and almost insensible pricks were found upon Cleopatra's arm. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

The dense and bright light of the circle will obscure the rare and weak light of these dark colours round about it, and render them almost insensible.

Newton's Opticks.

child, were even then lost when it was found. Shak.

In benefits as well as injuries, it is the principal that we are to consider, not the instrument; that which a man does by another, is in truth his own act. L'Estrange.

The bold are but the instruments of the wife,
They undertake the dangers they advise. Dryden.

INSTRUMENTAL. adj. [instrumental, Fr.
instrumentum, Latin.]

1. Conducive as means to some end; or-ganical.

All second and instrumental causes, without that operative faculty which God gave them, would become altogether silent, virtuous, and dead. Raleigh.

Prayer, which is instrumental to every thing, hath a particular promise in this thing. Taylor.

It is not an essential part of religion, but rather an auxiliary and instrumental duty. Smalridge.

some purpose; helpful: used of persons and things.

The presbyterian merit is of little weight, when they alledge themselves instrumental towards the restoration. Swift.

3. Consisting not of voices but instruments; produced by instruments, not vocal.

They which, under pretence of the law ceremonial abrogated, require the abrogation of instru- mental music, approving nevertheless the use of vocal melody to remain, must shew some reason, wherefore the one should be thought a legal ceremony and not the other. Hooker.

Out in bands,
While they keep watch, or nightly rounding walk,
With heav'nly touch of instrumental sounds
In full harmonious number join'd, their songs
Divide the night, and lift our thoughts to heav'n. Milton.

Sweet voices, mixt with instrumental sounds,
Ascend the vaulted roof, the vaulted roof rebounds. Dryden.

INSTRUMENTALITY. n. f. [from instru- mental.] Subordinate agency; agency of any thing as means to an end.

Those natural and involuntary actions are not done by deliberation and formal command, yet they are done by the virtue, energy, and influx of the soul, and the instrumentality of the spirits. Hale.

INSTRUMENTALLY. adv. [from instru- mental.] In the nature of an instrument;
as means to an end.

Men's well-being here in this life is but instru- mentally good, as being the means for him to be well in the next life. Digby.

Habitual preparation for the sacrament consists in a standing, permanent habit, or principle of holiness, wrought chiefly by God's spirit, and instru- mentally by his word, in the heart or soul of man. South.

INSTRUMENTALNESS. n. f. [from instru- mental.] Usefulness as means to an end.

The instrumentalness of riches to works of cha-

Eyes that confess'd him born for kingly sway,
So fierce they flash'd insufferable day. Dryden.

Though great light be insufferable to our eyes, yet the highest degree of darkness does not at all disease them; because that causing no disorderly motion, leaves that curious organ unharmed. Locke.

2. Detestable; contemptible; disgusting beyond endurance.

A multitude of scribblers, who daily pester the world with their insufferable stuff, should be discouraged from writing any more. Dryden.

INSUFFERABLY. adv. [from insufferable.]
To a degree beyond endurance.

Those heav'nly shapes
Will dazzle now this earthly, with their blaze Insufferably bright. Milton.

There is no person remarkably ungrateful, who was not also insufferably proud. South.

insufficiency, Latin.]

INSUFFICIENT. adj. [insufficient, Fr. insufficient, Latin.] Inadequateness to any end or purpose; want of requisite value or power. used of things and persons.

The minister's aptness or insufficiency is not than by reading to instruct the flock, as doth in this place as a stranger, with whom our form of common prayer hath nothing to do. Hooker.

The insufficiency of the light of nature, by the light of scripture, so fully supplied, that further light than this hath added, there doth not need unto that end. Harr.

We will give you sleepy drinks, that your senses, unintelligent of our insufficiency, may, though they cannot praise us, as little accuse us. Shakespeare.

Till experience has discovered their defect and in- sufficiency, I did certainly conclude them to be infallible. Wilkins.

Consider the pleas made use of to this purpose, and shew the insufficiency and weakness of them. Aterbury.

INSULT. v. a. [insulter, French; insulto, Latin.]

1. To treat with insolence or contempt. It is used sometimes with over, sometimes without a preposition.

The poet makes his hero, after he was glutted by the death of Hector, and the honour he did his friend by insulting over his murderer, to be moved by the tears of king Priam. Pope.

2. To trample upon; to triumph over.

It pleas'd the king his master very lately
 To strike at me upon his misconstruction;
 When he conjunct, and flatter'd his displeasure,
 Tript me behind; being down, insulted, rail'd,
 And put upon him such a deal of man,
 That worthied him. Shakespeare's King Lear.

So 'scapes the insulting fire his narrow jail,
 And makes small outlets into open air. Dryden.

Ev'n when they sing at ease in full content,
Insulting o'er the toil they underwent,
 Yet still they find a future task remain,
 To turn the soil. Dryden's Virgil.

INSULTER. n. f. [from insult.] One who treats another with insolent triumph.

Ev'n man, the merciless insulter man,
 Man, who rejoices in our sex's weakness,
 Shall pity thee. Rowe's Jane Shore.

INSULTINGLY. adv. [from insulting.] With contemptuous triumph.

Insultingly, he made your love his boast,
 Gave me my life, and told me what it cost. Dryd.

INSUPERABILITY. n. f. [from insuperable.] The quality of being invincible.

INSUPERABLE. adj. [insuperabilis, Lat.]

1. Invincible; insurmountable; not to be conquered; not to be overcome.

This appears to be an insuperable objection, because of the evidence that sense seems to give it. Digby on Bodies.

Much might be done, would we but endeavour;
 nothing is insuperable to pains and patience. Ray.

And middle natures how they long to join,
 Yet never pass th' insuperable line. Pope.

INSUPPORTABLE. adj. [insupportable, Fr. in and supportable] Intolerable; insufferable; not to be endured.

A disgrace put upon a man in company is insupportable; it is heightened according to the greatness, and multiplied according to the number, of the persons that hear. South.

The baser the enemies are, the more insupportable is the insolence. L'Estrange.

The thought of being nothing after death is a burden insupportable to a virtuous man: we naturally aim at happiness, and cannot bear to have it confined to our present being. Dryden.

To those that dwell under or near the Equator, this spring will be a most pestilent and insupportable Summer; and as for those countries that are nearer the Poles, a perpetual Spring will not do their business. Bentley.

INSUPPORTABLENESS. n. f. [from insupportable.] Insufferableness; the state of being beyond endurance.

Then fell she to so pitiful a declaration of the insupportableness of her desires, that Dorus's ears procur'd his eyes with tears to give testimony how much they suffered for her suffering. Sidney.

INSUPPORTABLY. adv. [from insupportable.] Beyond endurance.

INT

But safest he who stood aloof,
 When insupportably his foot advanc'd,
 In scorn of their proud arms, and warlike tools,
 Spurn'd them to death by troops. Milton's Agonistes.

The first day's audience sufficiently convinc'd me,
 That the poem was insupportably too long. Dryden.

INSURMOUNTABLE. adj. [insurmountable, Fr. in and surmountable.] Insuperable; unconquerable.

This difficulty is insurmountable, till I can make simplicity and variety the same. Locke.

Hope thinks nothing difficult; despair tells us, that difficulty is insurmountable. Watts.

INSURMOUNTABLY. adv. [from insurmountable.] Invincibly; unconquerably.

INSURRECTION. n. f. [insurgo, Latin.] A seditious rising; a rebellious commotion.

Between the acting of a dreadful thing,
 And the first motion, all the interim is Like a phantasma, or a hideous dream:
 The genius and the mortal instruments
 Are then in council; and the state of man,
 Like to a little kingdom, suffers then
 The nature of an insurrection. Shakespeare's Julius Caesar.

This city of old time hath made insurrection against kings, and that rebellion and sedition have been made therein. Ezra.

There shall be a great insurrection upon those that fear the Lord. 2 Esd. xvi. 70.

Insurrections of base people are commonly more furious in their beginnings. Bacon's Henry VII.

The trade of Rome had like to have suffered another great stroke by an insurrection in Egypt. Arbutnot.

INSUSURRA'TION. n. f. [insusurro, Latin.] The act of whispering into something.

No wonder if one remain speechless, though of integral principles, who, from an infant, should be bred up amongst mutes, and have no teaching. Holder.

3. Not fractional; not broken into fractions.

INTEGRAL. n. f. The whole made up of parts.

Physicians, by the help of anatomical dissections, have searched into those various meanders of the veins, arteries, nerves, and integrals of the human body. Hale.

Consider the infinite complications and combinations of several concurrences to the constitution and operation of almost every integral in nature. Hale.

A mathematical whole is better called integral, when the several parts, which make up the whole are distinct, and each may subsist apart. Watts.

INTEGRITY. n. f. [integrité, Fr. integritas, from integer, Lat.]

1. Honesty; uncorrupt mind; purity of manners; uncorruptedness.

INT

Your dishonour

Mangles true judgment, and bereaves the state
 Of that integrity which should become it. Shak.

Macduff, this noble passion,
 Child of integrity, hath from my soul
 Wip'd the black scruples, reconcil'd my thoughts
 To thy good truth and honour. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

Whoever has examined both parties cannot go far towards the extremes of either, without violence to his integrity or understanding. Swift.

The libertine, instead of attempting to corrupt our integrity, will conceal and disguise his own vices. Rogers.

2. Purity; genuine unadulterate state. Language continued long in its purity and integrity. Hale.

3. Intireness; unbroken; whole. Take away this transformation, and there is no chasm, nor can it affect the integrity of the action. Broome.

INTE'GUMENT. n. f. [integumentum, intego, Lat.] Any thing that covers or envelops another.

He could no more live without his frize coat than without his skin: it is not indeed so properly his coat, as what the anatomists call one of the integuments of the body. Addison.

INTELLECT. n. f. [intellect, Fr. intellectus, Lat.] The intelligent mind; the power of understanding.

All heart they live, all head, all eye, all ear,
 All intellect, all sense. Milton.

All those arts, rarities, and inventions, which vulgar minds gaze at, and the ingenious pursue, are but the reliques of an intellect defaced with sin and time. South.

INTELLE'CTION. n. f. [intellection, Fr. intellectio, Lat.] The act of understanding.

Simple apprehension denotes the soul's naked intellection of an object, without either composition or deduction. Glanville's Sceps.

They will say 'tis not the bulk or substance of the animal spirit, but its motion and agility, that produces intellection and sense. Bentley's Sermons.

INTELLE'CTIVE. adj. [intellectif, Fr. from intellect.] Having power to understand.

If a man as intellective be created, then either he means the whole man, or only that by which he is intellective. Glanville.

INTELLECTUAL. adj. [intellectuel, French; intellectualis, low Latin.]

1. Relating to the understanding; belonging to the mind; transacted by the understanding.

Religion teaches us to present to God our bodies as well as our souls: if the body serves the soul in actions natural and civil, and intellectual, it must not be eased in the only offices of religion. Taylor.

2. Mental; comprising the faculty of understanding; belonging to the mind.

Logick is to teach us the right use of our reason, or intellectual powers. Watts.

3. Ideal; perceived by the intellect, not the senses.

In a dark vision's intellectual scene,
 Beneath a bow'r for sorrow made,
 The melancholy Cowley lay. Cowley.

A train of phantoms in wild order rose,
 And, join'd, this intellectual scene compose. Pope.

4. Having the power of understanding.

Anaxagoras and Plato term the Maker of the world an intellectual worker. Hooker.

Who would lose,
 Though full of pain, this intellectual being,
 Those thoughts that wander through eternity,
 To perish rather, swallow'd up and lost,
 In the wide womb of uncreated night,
 Devoid of sense and motion? Milton.

5. Proposed as the object not of the senses but intellect: as, Cudworth names his book the intellectual system of the universe.

INTEL-

INT

INTELLECTUAL. n. f. Intellect; understanding; mental powers or faculties. This is little in use.

Her husband not nigh,
Whose higher intellectual more I shun. Milton.

The fancies of most, like the index of a clock, are moved but by the inward springs of the corporeal machine, which, even on the most sublimed intellectual, is dangerously influential. Glanville's Scip.

I have not consulted the repute of my intellectuals, in bringing their weaknesses into such discerning presences. Glanville.

INTELLIGENCE. } n. f. [intelligence, Fr.
INTELLIGENCY. } intelligentia, Latin.]

1. Commerce of information; notice; mutual communication; account of things distant or secret.

A mankind witch! hence with her, out of door!
A most intelligency bawd! Shakespeare.

He furnished his employed men liberally with money, to draw on and reward intelligences; giving them also in charge to advertise continually what they found. Bacon's Henry VII.

The advertisements of neighbour princes are always to be regarded, for that they receive intelligence from better authors than persons of inferior note. Hayward.

Let all the passages
Be well secur'd, that no intelligence
May pass between the prince and them. Denham.
Those tales had been sung to lull children asleep, before ever Berolus set up his intelligence office at Coos. Benley.

2. Commerce of acquaintance; terms on which men live one with another.

Faction followers are worse to be liked, which follow not upon affection to him with whom they range themselves; whereupon commonly ensueth that ill intelligence that we see between great personages. Bacon.

He lived rather in a fair intelligence, than any friendship with the favourites. Clarendon.

3. Spirit; unbodyed mind.

How fully hast thou satisfied me, pure Intelligence of heav'n, angel! Milton.

There are divers ranks of created beings intermediate between the glorious God and man, as the glorious angels and created intelligences. Hale.

They hoped to get the favour of the houses, and by the favour of the houses they hoped for that of the intelligences, and by their favour, for that of the Supreme God. Stillington.

The regularity of motion, visible in the great variety and curiosity of bodies, is a demonstration that the whole mass of matter is under the conduct of a mighty intelligence. Collier.

Satan appearing like a cherub to Uriel, the intelligence of the sun, circumvented him even in his own province. Dryden.

4. Understanding; skill.

Heaps of huge words, up hoarded, hideously,
They think to be chief praise of poetry;
And thereby wanting due intelligence,
Have marr'd the face of goodly poesy. Spenser.

INTELLIGENCER. n. f. [from intelligence.]

One who sends or conveys news; one who gives notice of private or distant transactions; one who carries messages between parties

His eyes, being his diligent intelligencers, could carry unto him no other news but discomfortable. Sidney.

How deep you were within the books of heav'n?
To us, th' imagin'd voice of heav'n itself;
The very opener and intelligencer
Between the grace and sanctities of heav'n

Locke.

2. To correct by something written between the lines.

He cancell'd an old will, and forg'd a new;

Made wealthy at the small expence of signing,

With a wet seal, and a fresh interlining.

Dryden.

Three things render a writing suspected: the person producing a false instrument, the person that frames it, and the interlining and raising out of words contained in such instruments.

Ayliffe's Parer.

The muse invok'd, sit down to write,

Blot out, correct, and interline.

Swift.

INTERLINEATION. n. f. [inter and lineation.] Correction made by writing between the lines.

Many clergymen write in so diminutive a manner, with such frequent blots and interlineations, that they are hardly able to go on without perpetual hesitations.

Swift.

To INTERLINK. v. a. [inter and link.]

To connect chains one to another; to join one in another.

The fair mixture in pictures causes us to enter into the subject which it imitates, and imprints it the more deeply into our imagination and our memory: these are two chains which are interlinked, which contain, and are at the same time contained.

Dryden.

INTERLOCUTION. n. f. [interlocution, Fr. interlocutio, Lat.]

1. Dialogue; interchange of speech.

South.

Sure thou art born to some peculiar fate, When the mad people rise against the state, To look them into duty; and command An awful silence with thy lifted hand.

Dryden.

It concerns every man that would not trifle away his soul, and fool himself into irrecoverable misery, with the greatest seriousness to enquire into these matters.

Tillotson.

He is not a frail being, that he should be tired into compliance by the force of assiduous application.

Smalridge.

In hollow bottoms, if any fountains chance to rise, they naturally spread themselves into lakes, before they can find any issue.

Addison on Italy.

It would have been all irretrievably lost, was it not by this means collected and brought into one mass.

Woodward.

Why are these positions charged upon me as their sole author; and the reader led into a belief, that they were never before maintained by any person of virtue?

Atterbury.

It is no ways congruous, that God should be always frightening men into an acknowledgment of the truth, who were made to be wrought upon by calm evidence.

Atterbury.

A man may whore and drink himself into Atheism; but it is impossible he should think himself into it.

Bentley.

INTOLERABLE. adj. [intolerabilis, Latin; intolérable, French.]

1. Insufferable; not to be endured; not to be borne; having any quality in a degree too powerful to be endured.

If we bring into one day's thoughts the evil of many, certain and uncertain, what will be and what will never be, our load will be as intolerable as it was unreasonable.

Taylor.

His awful presence did the crowd surprize, Nor durst the rash spectator meet his eyes;

Eyes that confess'd him born for kingly sway,

So fierce, they flash'd intolerable day.

Dryden.

Some men are quickly weary of one thing: the same study long continued in is as intolerable to them, as the appearing long in the same clothes is to a court lady.

Locke.

From Param's top th' Almighty rode, Intolerable day proclaim'd the God.

Broome.

2. Bad beyond sufferance.

INTOLERABLENESS. n. f. [from intolérable.] Quality of a thing not to be endured.

Pope's Dunciad.

To INTO'RT. v. a. [intortuo, Latin.] To twist; to wreath; to wring.

The brain is a congeries of glands, that separate the finer parts of the blood, called animal spirits: and a gland is nothing but a canal variously intorted and wound up together.

Arbutnot.

With rev'rent hand the king presents the gold, Which round th' intorted horns the gilder roll'd.

Pope.

To INTO'XICATE. v. a. [in and toxicum, Lat.] To inebriate; to make drunk.

The more a man drinketh of the world, the more it intoxicates him; and age doth profit rather in the powers of understanding, than in the virtues of the will and affections.

Bacon.

As with new wine intoxicated both, They swim in mirth, and fancy that they feel Divinity within them breeding wings, Wherewith to scorn the earth.

Milton.

My early mistress, now my ancient muse, That strong Circean liquor cease t' infuse, Wherewith thou did'st intoxicate my youth.

Denham.

What part of wild fury was there in the bacchanals which we have not seen equal'd, if not exceeded by some intoxicated zealots?

Decay of Piety.

Others, after having done fine things, yet spoil them by endeavouring to make them better; and are so intoxicated with an earnest desire of being above all others, that they suffer themselves to be deceived.

Dryden's Dufresnoy.

Vegetables by fermentation are wrought up to spirituous liquors, having different qualities from the plant; for no fruit taken crude has the intoxicating quality of wine.

Arbutnot.

INTOXICATION. n. f. [from intoxicate.]

Inebriation; ebriety; the act of making drunk; the state of being drunk.

That king, being in amity with him, did so burn in hatred towards him, as to drink of the lees and dregs of Perkins's intoxication, who was every where else detected.

Bacon.

Whence can this proceed, but from that besotting intoxication which verbal magick brings upon the mind.

South.

INTRAC'TABLE. adj. [intractabilis, Latin; intraitable, French.]

INTRACTABLY. adv. [from intractable.] Unmanageably; stubbornly.

INTRANQUILLITY. n. f. [in and tranquillity.] Unquietness; want of rest.

Jactations were used for amusement, and allay in constant pains, and to relieve that intranquillity which makes men impatient of lying in their beds.

Temple.

INTRANSITIVE. adj. [intransitivus, Latin.] [In grammar.] A verb intransitive is that which signifies an action, not conceived as having an effect upon any object; as, curro, I run.

Clarke's Latin Grammar.

INTRANSMUTABLE. adj. [in and transmutable.] Unchangeable to any other substance.

Some of the most experienced chemists do affirm quicksilver to be intransmutable, and therefore call it liquor æternus.

Ray on the Creation.

To INTREASURE. v. a. [in and treasure.] To lay up as in a treasury.

There is a history in all men's lives, Figuring the nature of the times deceas'd; The which observ'd, a man may prophesy, With a near aim, of the main chance of things As yet not come to life, which in their seeds And weak beginnings be intresured.

Shakespeare.

To INTRENCH. v. n. [in and trencher, Fr.]

To invade; to encroach; to cut off part of what belongs to another; with on.

Little I desire my sceptre should intrench on God's sovereignty, which is the only king of men's consciences.

K. Charles.

That crawling insect, who from mud began, Warm'd by my beams, and kindled into man! Durst he, who does but for my pleasure live, Intrench on love, my great prerogative.

Dryden.

We are not to intrench upon truth in any conversation, but least of all with children.

Locke.

To INTRENCH. v. a.

1. To break with hollows.

His face

Deep scars of thunder had intrench'd, and care Sat on his faded cheek.

Milton's Par. Lost.

2. To fortify with a trench: as, the allies were intrenched in their camp.

INTRENCHANT. adj. [This word, which is, I believe, found only in Shakespeare, is thus explained: The intrenchant air means the air which suddenly encroaches and closes upon the space left by any body which had passed through it, Hanmer. I believe Shakespeare intended rather to express the idea of indivisibility or invulnerableness, and derived intrenchant, from in privative, and trencher, to cut; intrenchant is indeed properly not cutting, rather than not to be cut; but this is not the only instance in which Shakespeare confounds words of active and passive signification.] Not to be divided; not to be wounded; indivisible.

As easy may it thou the intrenchant air With thy keen sword impress, as make me bleed.

Shakespeare.

INTRENCHMENT. n. f. [from intrench.] Fortification with a trench.

INTREPID. adj. [intrepide, Fr. intrepidus, Lat.] Fearless; daring; bold; brave.

Thomf.

INTREPIDITY. n. f. [intrepidité, Fr.] Fearlessness; courage; boldness.

I could not sufficiently wonder at the intrepidity of these diminutive mortals, who durst venture to walk upon my body, without trembling.

Gulliver.

INTRE-

INT

INT

INT

INTREPIDLY. adv. [from intrepid.] Fearlessly; boldly; daringly.

He takes the globe for the scene; he launches forward intrepidly, like one to whom no place is new. Pope.

INTRICACY. n. f. [from intricate.] State of being entangled; perplexity; involution; complication of facts or notions.

The part of Ulysses in Homer's Odyssy is much admired by Aristotle, as perplexing that fable with very agreeable plots and intricacies, by the many adventures in his voyage, and the subtilty of his behaviour. Addison.

INTRICATE. adj. [intricatus, Latin.] Entangled; perplexed; involved; complicated; obscure.

Much of that we are to speak may seem to a number perhaps tedious, perhaps obscure, dark, and intricate. Hooker.

His stile was fit to convey the most intricate business to the understanding with the utmost clearness. Addison.

To INTRICATE. [from the adjective.] To perplex; to darken. Not proper, nor in use.

Alterations of surnames, have so intricated, or rather obscured, the truths of our pedigrees, that it will be no little hard labour to deduce them. Camden.

INTRICATELY. adv. [from intricate.] With involution of one in another; with perplexity.

That variety of factions into which we are so intricately engaged, gave occasion to this discourse. Swift.

INTRICATENESS. n. f. [from intricate.] Perplexity; involution; obscurity.

He found such intricateness, that he could see no way to lead him out of the maze. Sidney.

INTRIGUE. n. f. [intrigue, Fr.]

1. A plot; a private transaction in which many parties are engaged; usually an affair of love.

These are the grand intrigues of man, These his huge thoughts, and these his vast desires. Flatman.

A young fellow long made love, with much artifice and intrigue, to a rich widow. Addison's Guardian.

The hero of a comedy is represented victorious in all his intrigues. Swift.

Now love is dwindled to intrigue, And marriage grown a money league. Swift.

2. Intricacy; complication. Little in use.

Though this vicinity of ourselves to ourselves cannot give us the full prospect of all the intrigues of our nature, yet we have much more advantage to know ourselves, than to know other things without us. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

3. The complication or perplexity of a fable or poem; artful involution of feigned transaction.

As causes are the beginning of the action, the opposite designs against that of the hero are the middle of it, and form that difficulty or intrigue which makes up the greatest part of the poem. Pope.

To INTRIGUE. v. n. [intriguer, Fr. from the noun.] To form plots; to carry on private designs, commonly of love.

INTRIGUER. n. f. [intriguer, Fr. from intrigue.] One who busies himself in private transactions; one who forms plots; one who pursues women.

I desire that intriguers will not make a pimp of my lion, and convey their thoughts to our another. Addison.

INTRIGUINGLY. adv. [from intrigue.] With intrigue; with secret plotting.

INTRINSECAL. adj. [intrinsecus, Lat. intrinseque, Fr. This word is now generally written intrinsic, contrary to etymology.]

1. Internal; solid; natural; not accidental; not merely apparent.

These measure the laws of God not by the intrinsic goodness and equity of them, but by reluctance and opposition which they find in their own hearts against them. Tilloson.

The near and intrinsic, and convincing argument of the being of God, is from human nature itself. Bentley.

2. Intimate; closely familiar. Out of use. He falls into intrinsic society with Sir John Graham, who dissuaded him from marriage. Wotton.

Sir Fulk Greville was a man in appearance intrinsic with him, or at least admitted to his melancholy hours. Wotton.

INTRINSECALLY. adv. [from intrinsic.]

Every one of his pieces is an ingot of gold, intrinsic and solidly valuable. Prior.

2. Within; at the inside.

In his countenance no open alteration; but the less he shewed without, the more it wrought *intrinsic*ly. Wotton.

If once bereaved of motion, matter cannot of itself acquire it again; nor till it be thrust by some other body from without, or *intrinsic*ly moved by an immaterial self-active substance that can pervade it. Bentley.

INTRINSICK. adj. [intrinsecus, Lat.]

1. Inward; internal; real; true.

Intrinsic goodness consists in accordance, and sin in contrariety to the secret will of God, as well as to his revealed. Hammond's Fundamentals.

2. Not depending on accident; fixed in the nature of the thing.

The difference between worth and merit, strictly taken; that, is a man's intrinsic, this, his current value. Grew.

His fame, like gold, the more 'tis tried

The more shall its intrinsic worth proclaim. Prior.

Beautiful as a jewel set in gold, which, though it adds little to intrinsic value, yet improves the lustre, and attracts the eyes of the beholder. Rogers.

INTRINSECAT. adj. [This word seems to have been ignorantly formed between intricate and intrinsic.] Perplexed; entangled. Not in use.

Such smiling rogues as these, Like rats, oft bite the holy cords in twain, Too intrinsecate t'undoose. Shaksp. King Lear.

Come, mortal wretch, With thy sharp teeth this knot intrinsecate Of life at once untie. Shak. Antony and Cleopatra.

To INTRODUCE. v. a. [introducere, Lat. introduire, French.]

1. To conduct or usher into a place, or to a person.

Mathematicians of advanced speculations may have other ways to introduce into their minds ideas of infinity. Locke.

2. To bring something into notice or practice.

This vulgar error whosoever is able to reclaim, he shall introduce a new way of cure, preserving by theory as well as practice. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

An author who should introduce a sort of words upon the stage, would meet with small applause. Broome.

3. To produce; to give occasion to.

Whosoever introduces habits in children, deserves the care and attention of their governors. Locke.

4. To bring into writing or discourse by proper preparatives.

If he will introduce himself by prefaces, we cannot help it. Layser's Trial.

INTRODUCER. n. f. [introducere, Fr. from introduce.]

1. One who conducts another to a place or person.

2. Any one who brings any thing into practice or notice.

The beginning of the Earl of Essex I must attribute to my lord of Leicester; but yet as an introducer or supporter, not as a teacher. Wotton.

It is commonly charged upon the army, that the beattly vice of drinking to excess hath been lately, from their example, restored among us; but whoever the introducers were, they have succeeded to a miracle. Swift.

INTRODUCTION. n. f. [introduction, Fr. intr. duction, Lat.]

1. The act of conducting or ushering to any place or person; the state of being ushered or conducted.

The actings of the mind or imagination itself, by way of reflection or introspection of themselves, are discernible by man. Hale.

I was forced to make an introspection into my own mind, and into that idea of beauty which I have formed in my own imagination. Dryden.

INTROVIENT. adj. [intro and venio, Latin.] Entering; coming in.

Scarce any condition which is not exhausted and obscured, from the commixture of introvient nations, either by commerce or conquest. Brown.

To INTRUDE. v. n. [intrudo, Latin.]

1. To

INT

1. To come in unwelcome by a kind of violence; to enter without invitation or permission.

Thy years want wit, thy wit wants edge
And manners, to intrude where I am grac'd.

Shakefp.

The Jewish religion was yet in possession; and therefore that this might so enter, as not to intrude, it was to bring its warrant from the same hand of omnipotence.

South.

2. It is followed by on before persons, or personal possessions.

Forgive me, fair one, if officious friendship
Intrudes on your repose, and comes thus late

To greet you with the tidings of success.

Rowe.

Some thoughts rise and intrude upon us, while we shun them; others fly from us, when we would hold them.

Watts.

3. To encroach: to force in uncalled or unpermitted: sometimes with into.

Let no man beguile you of your reward, in a voluntary humility, and worshipping of angels, intruding into those things which he hath not seen, by his fleshly mind.

Col. ii. 18.

INTRUDE. v. a. To force without right or welcome; commonly with the reciprocal pronoun.

Not to intrude one's self into the mysteries of government, which the princes keep secret, is represented by the winds shut up in a bull hide, which the companions of Ulysses would needs be so foolish as to pry into.

Pope.

INTRUDER. n. s. [from intrude.] One who forces himself into company or affairs without right or welcome.

Unmannerly intruder as thou art!

Shakespeare.

Go, base intruder! over-weening slave!

Locke.

2. Encroachment upon any person or place; unwelcome entrance; entrance without invitation or permission.

I think myself in better plight for a lender than you are, the which hath something emboldened me to this unseasoned intrusion; for they say, if money go before, all ways do lie open.

Shakespeare.

Frogs, lice, and flies, must all his palace fill
With loath'd intrusion.

Milton's Paradise Lost.

How's this, my son? Why this intrusion?

Were not my orders that I should be private?

Addis. Cato.

I may close, after so long an intrusion upon your meditations.

Wake's Preparation for Death.

3. Voluntary and uncalled undertaking of any thing.

It will be said, I handle an art no way suitable either to my employment or fortune, and so stand charged with intrusion and impertinency.

Wotton.

INTRUST. v. a. [in and trust.] To treat with confidence; to charge with any secret commission, or thing of value:

as, we intrust another with something; or we intrust something to another.

His majesty had a solicitous care for the payment of his debts; though in such a manner, that none of the duke's officers were intrusted with the knowledge of it.

Clarendon.

Receive my counsel, and securely move;

Intrust thy fortune to the pow'r above.

Dryden.

Are not the lives of those, who draw the sword

In Rome's defence, intrusted to our care?

Addis.

He compos'd his billet-doux, and at the time appointed went to intrust it to the hands of his confident.

Arbutnot.

INTUITION. n. s. [intuitus, intueor, Lat.]

1. Sight of any thing; used commonly of mental view. Immediate knowledge.

At our rate of judging, St. Paul had pass'd for a most malicious persecutor; whereas God saw he did it ignorantly in unbelief, and upon that intuition had mercy on him.

Government of the Tongue.

The truth of these propositions we know by a bare simple intuition of the ideas, and such propositions are called self-evident.

Locke.

2. Knowledge not obtained by deduction of reason, but instantaneously accompanying the ideas which are its object.

All knowledge of causes is deductive; for we know none by simple intuition, but through the mediation of their effects; for the causality itself is insensible.

Glanville.

Discourse was then almost as quick as intuition.

South.

He their single virtues did survey,

By intuition in his own large breast.

Dryden.

INTUITIVE. adj. [intuitivus, low Lat. intuitif. Fr.]

1. Seen by the mind immediately without the intervention of argument or testimony.

Immediate perception of the agreement and disagreement of two ideas, is when, by comparing them together in our minds, we see their agreement or disagreement; this therefore is called intuitive knowledge.

Locke.

Lofty flights of thoughts, and almost intuitive perception of abstruse notions, or exalted discoveries of mathematical theorems, we sometimes see existent in one person.

Bentley.

2. Seeing, not barely believing.

Faith, beginning here with a weak apprehension of things not seen, ended with the intuitive vision of God in the world to come.

Hooker.

3. Having the power of discovering truth immediately without ratiocination.

The rule of ghostly or immaterial natures, as spirits and angels, is their intuitive intellectual judgment, concerning the amiable beauty and high goodness of that object, which, with unspeakable joy and delight, doth set them on work.

Hooker.

The soul receives

Discursive or intuitive.

Milton.

INTUITIVELY. adv. [intuitivement, Fr.]

Without deduction of reason; by immediate perception.

That our love is sound and sincere, that it cometh from a pure heart, and a good conscience, and a faith unfeigned, who can pronounce, saving only the searcher of all men's hearts, who alone intuitively doth know in this kind who are his?

Hooker.

God Almighty, who sees all things intuitively, does not want logical helps.

Baker on Learning.

Tell a man, passionately in love, that he is jilted, bring a score of witnesses of the falsehood of his mistress, and it is ten to one but three kind words of her's, shall invalidate all their testimonies.

Locke.

INVALI'DE. n. f. [French.] One disabled by sickness or hurts.

What beggar in the invalides,

With lameness broke, with blindness smitten,
Wish'd ever decently to die?

Prior.

INVALI'DITY. n. f. [in and validity; invalidité, Fr.]

1. Weakness; want of cogency.

2. Want of bodily strength. This is no English meaning.

He ordered, that none who could work should be idle; and that none who could not work, by age, sickness, or invalidity, should want.

Temple.

INVA'LUABLE. adj. [in and valuable.] Precious above estimation; inestimable.

The faith produced by terror would not be so free an act as it ought, to which are annexed all the glorious and invaluable privileges of believing.

Atterbury.

INVA'RIABLE. adj. [in and varius, Lat. invariable, F.] Unchangeable; constant.

Being not able to design times by days, months, or years, they thought best to determine these alterations by some known and invariable signs, and such they conceive the rising and setting of the fixed stars.

Brown.

The rule of good and evil would not appear uniform and invariable, but different, according to men's different complexions and inclinations.

Atterbury.

INVA'RIABLENESS. n. f. [from invariable.] Immutability; constancy.

INVA'RIABLY. adv. [from invariable.] Unchangeably; constantly.

1. Hostile entrance upon the rights or possessions of another; hostile encroachment.

We made an invasion upon the Cherethites.

Sam. xxx.

Reason finds a secret grief and remorse from every invasion that sin makes upon innocence, and that must render the first entrance and admission of sin uneasy.

South.

The nations of th' Ausonian shore
Shall hear the dreadful rumour from afar,
Of arm'd invasion, and embrace the war.

Dryden's Ann.

William the Conqueror invaded England about the year 1066, which means this; that taking the duration from our Saviour's time 'till now, for one entire length of time, it shews at what distance this invasion was from the two extremes.

Locke.

2. Attack of a disease.

What demonstrates the plague to be endemial to Egypt, is its invasion and going off at certain seasons.

Arbutnot.

INVA'SIVE. adj. [from invade.] Entering hostilely upon other men's possessions; not defensive.

I must come closer to my purpose, and not make more invasive wars abroad, when, like Hannibal, I am called back to the defence of my country.

Dryden.

Let other monarchs, with invasive bands,
Lessen their people, and extend their lands;

INV

By gasping nations hated and obey'd,
Lords of the deserts that their swords had made.

Arbutnot.

INVE'CTIVE. n. f. [invektive; French; invektiva, low Latin.]

1. A censure in speech or writing; a reproachful accusation.

Plain men desiring to serve God as they ought, but being not so skilful as to unwind themselves, where the snares of glosing speech do lie to entangle them, are in mind not a little troubled, when they hear so bitter invektives against that which this church hath taught them to reverence as holy, to approve as lawful, and to observe as behoveful for the exercise of Christian duty.

Hooker.

If we take satyr, in the general signification of the word, for an invektive, 'tis almost as old as verse.

Dryd. Juv.

2. It is used with against.

So desp'rate thieves, all hopeless of their lives,
Breathe out invektives 'gainst the officers.

Shakefp. Henry VI.

Casting off respect, he fell into bitter invektives against the French king.

Bacon's Henry VII.

3. Less properly with at.

Whilst we condemn others, we may indeed be in the wrong; and then all the invektives we make at their supposed errors fall back with a rebounded force upon our own real ones.

Decay of Piety.

INVE'CTIVE. adj. [from the noun.] Satirical; abusive.

Let him rail on; let his invektive muse;

Have four-and-twenty letters to abuse.

Dryden.

INVE'CTIVELY. adv. Satirically; abusively.

Thus most invektively he pierceth through

The body of the country, city, court,

Yea, and of this our life; swearing that we

Are mere usurpers, tyrants.

Shakespeare.

To INVE'IGH. v. a. [inveho, Latin.] To utter censure or reproach: with against.

I cannot blame him for inveighing so sharply against the vices of the clergy in his age.

I leave the use of garlick to such as are inveigled into the gout by the use of too much drinking.

Temple.

The inveigling a woman, before she is come to years of discretion, should be as criminal as the seducing of her before she is ten years old.

Spektator.

INVEIGLER. n. f. [from inveigle.] Seducer; deceiver; allurer to ill.

Being presented to the Emperor for his admirable beauty, the prince clapt him up as his inveigler.

Sandys.

To INVE'NT. v. a. [inventer, Fr. invenio, Latin.]

INV

1. To discover; to find out; to excogitate; to produce something not made before.

The substance of the service of God, so far forth as it hath in it any thing more than the law of reason doth teach, may not be invented of men, but must be received from God himself.

Hooker.

By their count, which lovers books invent,

The sphere of Cupid forty years contains.

Spenser.

Matter of mirth enough, though there were none
She could devise, and thousand ways invent
To feed her foolish humour and vain jolliment.

Fairy Queen.

Woe to them that invent to themselves instruments of musick.

Amos.

We may invent

With what more forcible we may offend

Our enemies.

Milton.

In the motion of the bones in their articulations, a twofold liquor is prepared for the inunction of their heads; both which make up the most apt mixture, for this use, that can be invented or thought upon.

Ray.

Ye skilful masters of Machaon's race,

Who Nature's mazy intricacies trace,

By manag'd fire and late invented eyes.

Blackmore.

But when long time the wretches thoughts refin'd,

When want had set an edge upon their mind,

Then various cares their working thoughts employ'd,

And that which each invented, all enjoy'd.

Creech.

The ship, by help of a screw, invented by Archimedes, was launched into the water.

Arbutnot.

2. To forge; to contrive falsely; to fabricate.

I never did such things as those men have maliciously invented against me.

Susan. xliii.

Here is a strange figure invented, against the plain sense of the words.

Stillingfleet.

3. To feign; to make by the imagination.

I would invent as bitter searching terms,

With full as many signs of deadly hate,

As lean-fac'd envy in her loathsome cage.

Shak.

Hercules's meeting with Pleasure and Virtue was invented by Prodicus, who lived before Socrates, and in the first dawnings of philosophy.

Addison.

4. To light on; to meet with. Not used.

Far off he wonders what them makes so glad:

Or Bacchus' merry fruit they did invent,

Or Cybel's frantick rites have made them mad.

Spenser.

INVE'NTOR. n. f. [from inventeur, French.]

1. One who produces something new; a deviser of something not known before.

As a translator, he was just; as an inventor, he was rich.

Garth.

2. A forger.

INVE'NTION. n. f. [invention, French; inventio, Latin.]

1. Excogitation; the act or power of producing something new.

O for a muse of fire, that would ascend

The brightest heaven of invention!

Shakespeare.

By improving what was writ before;

Invention labours less, but judgment more.

Roscommon.

Invention is a kind of muse; which, being possessed of the other advantages common to her sisters, and being warmed by the fire of Apollo, is raised higher than the rest.

Dryden.

Mine is th' invention of the charming lyre:

Sweet notes and heav'nly numbers I inspire.

Dryden.

The chief excellence of Virgil is judgment, of Homer is invention.

Pope.

2. Discovery.

Nature hath provided several glandules to separate spittle from the blood, and no less than four pair of channels to convey it into the mouth, which are of a late invention, and called ductus salivales.

Ray on the Creation.

3. Forgery; fiction.

We hear our bloody cousins, not confessing
Their cruel parricide, filling their hearers
With strange invention.

Shakespeare. Macbeth.

If

If thou canst accuse,
Do it without invention suddenly. Shaksp.

4. The thing invented.

The garden, a place not fairer in natural ornaments than artificial inventions. Sidney.

'Th' invention all admir'd; and each how he
To be th' inventor mis'd, so easy it seem'd Once found, which yet unfound most would have thought Impossible. Milton's Paradise Lost.

INVENTIVE. adj. [inventif, Fr. from invent.]

1. Quick at contrivance; ready at expedients.

Those have the inventive heads for all purposes, and roundest tongues in all matters. Ascham.

That inventive head
Her fatal image from the temple drew,
The sleeping guardians of the castle flew. Dryden.

The inventive god, who never fails his part,
Inspires the wit, when once he warms the heart. Dryden.

2. Having the power of excogitation or fiction.

As he had an inventive brain, so there never lived any man that believed better thereof, and of himself. Raleigh.

Reason, remembrance, wit, inventive art,
No nature, but immortal, can impart. Danham.

INVENTOR. n. s. [inventor, Latin.]

1. A finder out of something new. It is written likewise inventer.

We have the statue of your Columbus, that discovered the West Indies, also the inventor of ships: your Monk, that was the inventor of ordnance, and of gunpowder. Bacon.

Studious they appear
Of arts that polish life; inventors rare, Unmindful of their maker. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Why are these positions charged upon me as their sole author and inventor, and the reader led into a belief, that they were never before maintained by any person of virtue? Atterbury.

2. A contriver; a framer. In an ill sense.

In this upshot, purposes mistook, Fall'n on th' inventors' heads. Shakespeare.

INVENTOR'ALLY. adv. [from inventory, whence perhaps inventorial.] In manner of an inventory.

To divide inventorially, would dizzy the arithmetic of memory. Shaksp. Hamlet.

I found,
Forsooth, an inventory, thus importing,
The several parcels of his plate. Shaksp.

The leanness that afflicts us, the object of our misery, is as an inventory to particularize their abundance, our sufferings is a gain to them. Shaksp. Coriolanus.

Whoe'er looks,
For themselves dare not go, o'er Cheapside books,
Shall find their wardrobe's inventory. Donne.

It were of much consequence to have such an inventory of nature, wherein, as, on the one hand, nothing should be wanting, so nothing repeated on the other. Grew's Museum.

In Persia the daughters of Eve are reckoned in the inventory of their goods and chattles; and it is usual, when a man sells a bale of silk, to toss half a dozen women into the bargain. Addison.

INVENTORY. v. a. [inventorier, Fr.] To register; to place in a catalogue.

I will give out divers schedules of my beauty: it shall be inventoried, and every particle and utensil label'd. Shaksp.

A man looks on the love of his friend as one of the richest possessions: the philosopher thought friends were to be inventoried as well as goods. Gov. of the Tongue.

INVENTRESS. n. s. [inventrice, Fr. from inventer.] A female that invents.

The arts with all their retinue of lesser trades, history and tradition tell us when they had their beginning; and how many of their inventors and inventresses were deified. Burnet.

Cecilia came,
Inventress of the vocal frame;
The sweet enthusiast, from her sacred store,
Enlarg'd the former narrow bounds. Dryden.

INVERSE. adj. [inverse, Fr. inversus, Lat.]

Inverted; reciprocal: opposed to direct. It is so called in proportion, when the fourth term is so much greater than the third, as the second is less than the first; or so much less than the third as the second is greater than the first.

Every part of matter tends to every part of matter with a force, which is always in a direct proportion of the quantity of matter, and an inverse duplicate proportion of the distance. Garth.

INVERSION. n. s. [inversion, Fr. inversio, Latin.]

1. Change of order or time, so as that the last is first, and first last.

If he speaks truth, it is upon a subtle inversion of the precept of God, to do good that evil may come of it. Brown.

'Tis just the inversion of an act of parliament; your lordship first signed it, and then it was passed among the lords and commons. Dryden.

2. Change of place, so that each takes the room of the other.

To INVERT. v. a. [inverto, Latin.]

1. To turn upside down; to place in contrary method or order to that which was before.

With fate inverted, shall I humbly woo?
And some proud prince in wild Numidia born,
Pray to accept me, and forget my scorn! Waller.

Ask not the cause why fullen Spring
So long delays her flow'rs to bear,
And Winter storms invert the year. Dryden.

Poesy and oratory omit things essential, and invert times and actions, to place every thing in the most affecting light. Watts.

2. To place the last first.

Yes, every poet is a fool;
By demonstration Ned can shew it:
Happy, could Ned's inverted rule Prove every fool to be a poet. Prior.

3. To divert; to turn into another channel; to imbezzle. Instead of this convert or intervert is now commonly used.

Solyman charged him bitterly with inverting his treasures to his own private use, and having secret intelligence with his enemies. Knolles's History of the Turks.

INVERTEDLY. adv. [from inverted.] In contrary or reversed order.

Placing the forepart of the eye to the hole of the window of a darkened room, we have a pretty landscape of the objects abroad, invertedly painted on the paper, on the back of the eye. Derham.

To INVEST. v. a. [investir, Fr. investio, Latin.]

1. To dress; to clothe; to array. It has in or with before the thing superinduced or conferred.

Their gesture sad,
Invest in lank lean cheeks and war-worn coats,
Presented them unto the gazing moon,
So many horrid ghasts. Shaksp. Henry V.

Thou with a mantle didst invest
The rising world of waters. Milton.

Let thy eyes shine forth in their full lustre;
Invest them with thy loves, put on Thy choicest looks. Danham's Sophy.

2. To place in possession of a rank or office.

When we sanctify or hallow churches, that which we do is only to testify that we make them places of public resort, that we invest God himself with them, and that we sever them from common uses. Hooker.

After the death of the other archbishop, he was invested in that high dignity, and settled in his palace at Lambeth. Clarendon.

The practice of all ages, and countries, hath been to do honour to those who are invested with publick authority. Atterbury.

3. To adorn; to grace; as clothes or ornaments.

Honour must
Not unaccompanied, invest him only;
But signs of nobleness, like stars, shall shine
On all deserving. Shaksp. Macbeth.

The foolish, over-careful fathers for this engross'd
The canker'd heaps of strong achieved gold;
For this they have been thoughtful to invest
Their sons with arts and martial exercises. Shaksp.

Some great potentate,
Or of the thrones above; such majesty Invests him coming. Milton.

4. To confer; to give.

If there can be found such an inequality between man and man, as there is between man and beast, or between soul and body, it invests a right of government. Bacon.

5. To enclose; to surround so as to intercept succours or provisions: as, the enemy invested the town.

INVESTIENT. adj. [investiens, Latin.] Covering; clothing.

The shells served as plasma or moulds to this sand, which, when consolidated and freed from its investient shell is of the same shape as the cavity of the shell. Woodward.

INVESTIGABLE. adj. [from investigate.] To be searched out; discoverable by rational disquisition.

Finally, in such sort they are investigable, that the knowledge of them is general; the world hath always been acquainted with them. Hooker.

In doing evil, we prefer a less good before a greater, the greatness whereof is by reason investigable, and may be known. Hooker.

To INVESTIGATE. v. a. [investigo, Latin.] To search out: to find out by rational disquisition.

Investigate the variety of motions and figures made by the organs for articulation. Holder on Speech.

From the present appearances investigate the powers and forces of nature, and from these account for future observations. Cheyne.

INVESTIGATION. n. s. [investigation, Fr. investigatio, Latin.]

1. The act of the mind by which unknown truths are discovered.

Not only the investigation of truth, but the communication of it also, is often practised in such a method as neither agrees precisely to synthetick or analytick. Watts.

Progressive truth, the patient force of thought Investigation calm, whole silent powers Command the world. Thomson's Summer.

2. Examination.

Your travels I hear much of: my own shall never more be in a strange land, but a diligent investigation of my own territories. Pope to Swift.

INVESTITURE. n. s. [French.]

1. The right of giving possession of any manour, office, or benefice.

He had refused to yield up to the pope the investiture of bishops, and collation of ecclesiastical dignities within his dominions. Raleigh's Essays.

2. The act of giving possession.

INVESTMENT. n. s. [in and vestment.] Dress; clothes; garment; habit.

Ophelia, do not believe his vows; for they are brokers,
Not of that dye which their investments shew. Shaksp.

You, my lord archbishop,
Whose see is by a civil peace maintained,
Whose beard the silver hand of peace hath touch'd,
Whose learning and good letters peace hath tutor'd,
Whose white investments figure innocence,

The dove, and every blessed spirit of peace;
Wherefore do you so ill translate yourself
Out of the speech of peace, that bears such grace,
Into the harsh and boisterous tongue of war?
Shakespeare.

INVE'TERACY. n. f. [inveteratio, Latin.]

1. Long continuance of any thing bad;
obstinacy confirmed by time.

The inveteracy of the people's prejudices compelled their rulers to make use of all means for reducing them. Addison.

2. [in physick.] Long continuance of a disease.

INVE'TERATE. adj. [inveteratus, Latin.]

1. Old; long established.

The custom of Christians was then, and had been a long time, not to wear garlands, and therefore that undoubtedly they did offend who presumed to violate such a custom by not observing that thing;
the very inveterate observation whereof was a law, sufficient to bind all men to observe it, unless they could shew some higher law, some law of Scripture, to the contrary. Hooker.

It is an inveterate and received opinion, that cantharides, applied to any part of the body, touch the bladder, and exulcerate it.

Bacon's Natural History.

2. Obstinate by long continuance.

It is not every sinful violation of conscience that can quench the spirit; but it must be a long inveterate course and custom of sinning, that at length produces and ends in such a cursed effect. South.

He who writes satire honestly is no more an enemy to the offender, than the physician to the patient, when he prescribes harsh remedies to an inveterate disease. Dryden.

In a well-instituted state the executive power will never let abuses grow inveterate, or multiply so far that it will be hard to find remedies. Swift.

INVE'TERATE. v. a. [inveterer, Fr. invetero, Lat.] To fix and settle by long continuance.

The vulgar conceived, that now there was an end given, and a consummation to superstitious prophesies, and to an ancient tacit expectation, which had by tradition been infused and inveterated into men's minds. Bacon.

Let not Atheists lay the fault of their sins upon human nature, which have their prevalence from long custom and inveterated habit. Bentley.

INVE'TERATENESS. n. f. [from inveterate.]

Long continuance of any thing bad;
obstinacy confirmed by time.

As time hath rendered him more perfect in the art, so hath the inveterateness of his malice made him more ready in the execution.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

Neither the inveterateness of the mischief, nor the prevalence of the fashion, shall be any excuse for those who will not take care about the meaning of their words. Locke.

INVETERATION. n. f. [inveteratio, Latin.]

The act of hardening or confirming by long continuance.

INVIDIOUS. adj. [invidiosus, Latin.]

I shall open to them the interior secrets of this mysterious art, without imposture or invidious reserve. Evelyn.

2. Likely to incur or to bring hatred. This is the more usual sense.

Agamemnon found it an invidious affair to give the preference to any one of the Grecian heroes.

Broom.

Not to be further tedious, or rather invidious, these are a few causes which have contributed to the ruin of our morals. Swift.

INVIDIOUSLY. adv. [from invidious.]

1. Malignantly; enviously.

2. In a manner likely to provoke hatred.

The clergy murmur against the privileges of the laity; the laity invidiously aggravate the immunities of the clergy. Spratt.

Vol. I.

INVIDIOUSNESS. n. f. [from invidious.]

Quality of provoking envy or hatred.

TO INVIGORATE. v. a. [in and vigour.]

To endue with vigour; to strengthen;
to animate; to enforce.

The spleen is introduced to invigorate the sinister side, which, dilated, would rather infirm and debilitate. Brown.

Gentle warmth

Discloses well the earth's all-teeming womb, Invigorating tender seeds. Philips.

I have lived when the prince, instead of invigorating the laws, assumed a power of dispensing with them. Addison.

No one can enjoy health, without he feel a light-some and invigorating principle, which spurs him to action. Spektor.

Christian graces and virtues they cannot be, unless fed, invigorated, and animated by universal charity.
Atterbury.

INVIGORATION. n. f. [from invigorate.]

1. The act of invigorating.

2. The state of being invigorated.

I find in myself an appetitive faculty, which is always in the very height of activity and invigoration. Norris.

INVINCIBLE. adj. [invincible, French; invincibilis, Latin.] Insuperable; unconquerable; not to be subdued.

I would have thought her spirits had been invincible against all assaults of affection. Shakespeare.

Should he invade their country, he would soon see that invincible nation with their united forces up in arms. Knolles.

The spirit remains invincible. Milton.

That mistake, which is the consequence of invincible error, scarce deserves the name of wrong judgment. Locke.

If an Atheist had had the making of himself, he would have framed a constitution that could have kept pace with his insatiable lust, been invincible by intemperance, and have held out a thousand years in a perpetual debauch. Bentley.

INVINCIBLENESS. n. f. [from invincible.]

Unconquerableness; insuperableness.

INVINCIBLY. adv. [from invincible.] In-superably; unconquerably.

Ye have been fearless in his righteous cause;
And as ye have receiv'd, so have ye done Invincibly. Milton.

Neither invitations nor threats avail with those who are invincibly impeded, to apply them to their benefit. Dec. of Piety.

INVIOLEABLE. adj. [invioleable, French; invioleabilis, Latin.]

1. Not to be profaned; not to be injured.

Thou, be sure, shalt give account
To him who sent us, whose charge is to keep
This place invioleable, and these from harm. Milton.

In vain did Nature's wife command
Divide the waters from the land,
If daring ships, and men prophane,
Invade th' invioleable main;
Th' eternal fencibles overleap,
And pass at will the boundless deep. Dryden.

Ye lamps of heav'n, he said, and lifted high
His hands, now free; thou venerable sky!
Invioleable pow'rs! ador'd with dread,
Be all of you adjur'd. Dryden's Æn.

This birthright, when our author pleases, must and must not be sacred and invioleable. Locke.

2. Not to be broken.

The prophet David thinks, that the very meeting of men together, and their accompanying one another to the house of God, should make the bond of their love insoluble, and tie them in a league of invioleable amity. Hooker.

See, see, they join, embrace, and seem to kiss,
As if they vow'd some league invioleable. Shakesp.

3. Insusceptible of hurt or wound.

Th' invioleable saints
In cubick phalanx firm advanc'd intire. Milton.

INVIOLEABLY. adv. [from invioleable.]

Without breach; without failure.

Mere acquaintance you have none: you have drawn them all into a nearer line; and they who have conversed with you, are for ever after inviolably yours. Dryden.

The true profession of Christianity invioleably engages all its followers to do good to all men. Spratt.

INVIOLEATE. adj. [invioleate, Fr. invioleatus, Lat.] Unhurt; uninjured; unprofaned;
unpolluted; unbroken.

His fortune of arms was still invioleate.

Bacon's Hen. VII.

But let invioleate truth be always dear
To thee, even before friendship, truth prefer. Denham.

If the past

Can hope a pardon, by those mutual bonds
Nature has seal'd between us, which, though I Have cancell'd, thou hast still preserv'd invioleate:
I beg thy pardon. Denham's Sophy.

My love your claim invioleate secures;
'Tis writ in fate, I can be only yours. Dryden.

In all the changes of his doubtful state,
His truth, like Heav'n's, was kept invioleate. Dryden.

INVIOUS. adj. [invius, Latin.] Impassable; untrodden.

If nothing can oppugn his love,
And virtue invious ways can prove,
What may not he confide to do,
That brings both love and virtue too? Hudibras.

INVISIBILITY. n. f. [invisibilitas, Fr. from invisible.] The state of being invisible;
imperceptibility to sight.

They may be demonstrated to be innumerable, substituting their smallness for the reason of their invisibility. Ray.

INVISIBLE. adj. [invisible, Fr. invisibilis, Latin.] Not perceptible by the sight; not to be seen.

He was invisible that hurt me so;
And none invisible, but spirits, can go. Sidney.

The threaten sails,
Borne with th' invisible and creeping wind,
Drew the huge bottoms to the furrow'd sea. Shakespeare.

'Tis wonderful,
That an invisible instinct should frame them
To loyalty unlearn'd, honour untaught. Shakespeare.

To us invisible, or dimly seen,
In these thy lowest works. Milton.

He that believes a God, believes such a being as hath all perfections; among which this is one, that he is a spirit, and consequently that he is invisible, and cannot be seen. Tillotson.

It seems easier to make one's self invisible to others, than to make another's thoughts visible to me, which are not visible to himself. Locke.

INVISIBLY. adv. [from invisible.] Imperceptibly to the sight.

Age by degrees invisibly doth creep,
Nor do we seem to die, but fall asleep. Denham.

TO INVISCATE. v. a. [in and viscus, Lat.]

To lime; to intangle in glutinous matter.

The camelion's food being flies, it hath in the

Our

Our cannon's malice vainly shall be spent Against th' invulnerable clouds of heav'n. Shak.
Nor vainly hope
To be invulnerable in those bright arms;
That mortal dint none can resist. Milton.

Vanessa, though by Pallas taught,
By love invulnerable thought,
Searching in books for wisdom's aid,
Was in the very search betray'd. Swift.

To INWALL. v. a. [in and wall.] To inclose or fortify with a wall.

Three such towns in those places with the garrisons, would be so augmented as they would be able with little to inwall themselves strongly. Spenser on Ireland.

INWARD. } adv. [inward, Saxon.]
INWARDS. }

1. Towards the internal parts; within.

The parts of living creatures that be more inwards, nourish more than the outward flesh. Bacon's Natural History.

The medicines which go to these magical ointments are so strong, that if they were used inwards
they would kill; and therefore they work potently, though outwards. Bacon.

2. With inflexion or incurvity; concavely.

He stretches out his arm in sign of peace, with his breast bending inward. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

3. Into the mind or thoughts.

With outward smiles their flattery I receiv'd;
But bent and inward to myself again
Perplex'd, these matters I revolv'd; in vain. Prior.

3. Intimate; domestic; familiar.

Though the lord of the liberty do pain himself all he may to yield equal justice unto all, yet can there not but great abuses lurk in so inward and absolute a privilege. Spenser.

All my inward friends abhorred me.

Job, xix. 19.

4. Seated in the mind.

Princes have but their titles for their glories,
An outward honour for an inward toil;
And for unfelt imaginations,
They often feel a world of restless cares. Shak.

INWARD, n. s.

1. Any thing within, generally the bowels.
Seldom has this sense a singular.

Then sacrificing, laid

The inwards, and their fat, with incense strew'd
On the cleft wood, and all due rites perform'd. Milton.

They esteem them most profitable, because of the great quantity of fat upon their inwards. Mortimer.

Covering discovers your quick soul; that we May in your through-shine front your heart's thoughts
see. Donne.

2. To perplex; to puzzle with difficulty or obscurity.

The case is no sooner made than resolv'd: if it be made not inwrapped, but plainly and perspicuously. Bacon.

3. It is doubtful whether the following examples should not be entrap or inrap, from in and rap, rapio, Latin, to ravish or transport.

This pearl she gave me I do feel't and see't;
And though 'tis wonder that entrap me thus,
Yet 'tis not madness. Shakespeare.

For if such holy song
Entwrap our fancy long,
Time will run back, and fetch the age of gold. Milton.

INWROUGHT, adj. [in and wrought.]
Adorned with work.

Camus, reverend sire, went footing slow,
His mantle hairy and his bonnet sedge,
Inwrought with figures dim, and on the edge
Like to that sanguine flower inscrib'd with woe. Milton.

The judge shall job, the bishop bite the town,
And mighty dukes pack cards for half a crown. Pope.

JOB'S TEARS, n. s. An herb. Ainsworth.

JOBBER, n. s. [from job.]

1. A man who sells stock in the publick funds.

So cast it in the southern seas,
And view it through a jobber's bill;
Put on what spectacles you please,
Your guinea's but a guinea still. Swift.

2. One who does chancework.

JOBBERNOWL, n. s. [most probably from jobbe, Flemish, dull, and nowl, pnol,
Saxon, a head.] Loggerhead; blockhead.

And like the world, men's jobbernows
Turn round upon their ears, the poles. Hudibras.

JOCKEY, n. s. [from Jack, the diminutive of John, comes Jackey, or, as the Scotch, jockey, used for any boy, and particularly for a boy that rides race-horses.]

1. A fellow that rides horses in the race.

These were the wise ancients, who heaped up greater honours on Pindar's jockies than on the poet himself. Addison.

2. A man that deals in horses.

3. A cheat; a trickish fellow.

To JOCKEY, v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To juggle by riding against one.

2. To cheat; to trick.

JOCOSE, adj. [jocosus, Lat.] Merry;
waggish; given to jest.

If the subject be sacred, all ludicrous turns, and jocose or comical airs, should be excluded, lest young minds learn to trifle with the awful solemnities of religion. Watts.

JOCOSELY, adv. [from jocose.] Wag-gishly; in jest; in game.

Spondanus imagines that Ulysses may possibly speak jocosely, but in truth Ulysses never behaves with levity. Broomer.

JOCOSENESS, } n. s. [from jocose.] Waggery; merriment.

A laugh there is of contempt or indignation, as well as of mirth or jocosity. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

JO'ULAR, adj. [jocularis, Lat.] Used in jest; merry; jocose; waggish; not serious: used both of men and things.

These jocular slanders are often as mischievous as those of deepest design. Government of the Tongue.

The satire is a dramatick poem; the stile is partly serious, and partly jocular. Dryden.

Good Veilum, don't be jocular. Audifert.

JOCULARITY, n. s. [from jocular.] Merriment; disposition to jest.

The wits of those ages were short of these of ours; when men could maintain immutable faces, and persist unalterably at the efforts of jocularity. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

JOCUND, adj. [jocundus, Lat.] Merry;
gay; airy; lively.

There's comfort yet; then be thou jocund. Shakespeare.

ruined jocundly and pleasantly, and dainted according to his heart's desire. Soutb.

To JOG. v. a. [schocken, Dutch.] To push; to shake by a sudden impulse; to give notice by a sudden push.

Now leaps he upright, jogs me and cries, Do you see

Yonder well-favour'd youth? Denne.

This said, he jogg'd his good steed nigher,
And steer'd him gently toward the squire. Hudibras.

I was pretty well pleased while I expected, till fruition jogged me out of my pleasing slumber, and I knew it was but a dream. Norris.

Sudden I jogg'd Ulysses, who was laid Fast by my side. Pope's Odyssey.

To JOG. v. n.

1. To move by succussion; to move with small shocks like those of a low trot.

The door is open, Sir, there lies good way,
You may be jogging while your boots are green. Shakesp.

Here lieth one, who did most truly prove
That he could never die while he could move;
So hung his destiny, never to rot
While he might still jog on and keep his trot. Milton.

2. To travel idly and heavily.

Jog on, jog on the foot-path way,
And merrily heat the stile-a,

A merry heart goes all the day,
Your sad tires in a mile-a. Shakesp. Winter's Tale.

Away they trotted together: but as they were jogging on, the wolf spy'd a bare place about the dog's neck. L'Estrange.

Thus they jog on, still tricking, never thriving,
And murd'ring plays, which they miscall reviving. Dryden.

JOG. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A push; a slight shake; a sudden interruption by a push or shake; a hint given by a push.

As a leopard was valuing himself upon his party-coloured skin, a fox gave him a jog, and whispered, that the beauty of the mind was above that of a painted outside. L'Estrange.

Nick found the means to slip a note into Lewis's hands, which Lewis as slyly put into John's pocket, with a pinch or a jog to warn him what he was about. Arbutnot.

A letter when I am inditing,
Comes Cupid and gives me a jog,
And I fill all the paper with writing
Of nothing but sweet Molly Mog. Swift.

2. A rub; a small stop; an irregularity of motion.

How that which penetrates all bodies without the least jog or obstruction, should impress a motion on any, is inconceivable. Glanville's Sceptis.

JO'GGER. n. f. [from jog.] One who moves heavily and dully.

They, with their fellow joggers of the plough. Dryden.

To JO'GGLE. v. n. To shake.

Amendment ready still at hand did wait,

To pluck it out with pincers fiery hot,

That soon in him was left no one corrupt jot. Fa. Queen.

Go, Eros, send his treasure after, do it:

Detain no jot, I charge thee. Shakespeare.

Let me not stay a jot from dinner; go, get it ready. Shakespeare.

This nor hurts him nor profits you a jot;

Forbear it therefore; give your cause to Heav'n. Shakespeare.

This bond doth give thee here no jot of blood;

The words expressly are a pound of flesh. Shakespeare.

I argue not

Against Heav'n's hand, or will; nor bate one jot

Of heat or hope; but still bear up and steer

Right onwards. Milton.

You might, with every jot as much justice, hang me up because I'm old, as beat me because I'm impotent. L'Estrange.

A man may read the discourses of a very rational author, and yet acquire not one jot of knowledge. Locke.

The final event will not be one jot less the consequence of our own choice and actions, for God's having from all eternity foreseen and determined what that event shall be. Rogers.

See him draw his feeble legs about,
Like hounds ill-coupled: jowler lugs him still Through hedges, ditches, and through all this ill. Dryden.

JO'WTER. n. s. [perhaps corrupted from jolter.]

Plenty of fish is vented to the fish-drivers, whom we call jowters. Carew.

JOY. n. s. [joye, Fr. gioia, Italian.]

1. The passion produced by any happy accident; gladness; exultation.

Joy is a delight of the mind, from the consideration of the present, or assured approaching possession of a good. Locke.

There appears much joy in him; even so much, that joy could not shew itself modest enough without a badge of bitterness. Shakesp.

There should not be such heaviness in their destruction, as shall be joy over them that are persuaded to salvation. 2 Esdr.

The lightsome passion of joy was not that trivial, vanishing, superficial thing, that only gilds the apprehension, and plays upon the surface of the soul. South.

2. Gaiety; merriment; festivity.

The roofs with joy resound;
And Hymen, to Hymen, rung around. Dryden.

3. Happiness; felicity.

My lord Bassanio, and my gentle lady,
I wish you all the joy that you can wish. Shakesp.
Come, love and health to all;
Then I'll sit down: give me some wine:
I drink to the general joy of the whole table. Shak.

Almeyda smiling came,
Attended with a train of all her race,
Whom in the rage of empire I had murder'd;
But now, no longer foes, they gave me joy
Of my new conquest. Dryden's Don Sebastian.

The bride,
Lovely herself, and lovely by her side,
A bery of bright nymphs, with sober grace,
Came glitt'ring like a star, and took her place:
Her heav'nly form beheld, all wish'd her joy;
And little wanted, but in vain, their wishes all employ. Dryden.

4. A term of fondness.

Now our joy,
Although our last, yet not our least young love,
What say you? Shakespeare's King Lear.

To JOY. v. n. [from the noun.] To rejoice; to be glad; to exult.

Sometimes I joy, when glad occasion fits,
And mark in mirth like to a comedy;
Soon after, when my joy doth sorrow fits,
I will make my woes a tragedy. Spenser.

I cannot joy, until I be resolv'd
Where our right valiant father is become. Shakesp. H. VI.

JOY

He will joy over thee with singing. Zeph. iii. 17.

Six brave companions from each ship we lost:
With sails outspread we fly th' unequal strife,
Sad for their loss, but joyful of our life. Pope's Odyssey.

JOYFULLY. adv. [from joyful.] With joy; gladly.

If we no more meet till we meet in heav'n,
Then joyfully, my noble lord of Bedford,
And my kind kinsmen, warriors all, adieu. Shak.

Never did men more joyfully obey,
Or sooner understood the sign to die:
With such alacrity they bore away,
As if to praise them all the states stood by. Dryden.

The good Christian considers pains only as necessary passages to a glorious immortality; that, through this dark scene of fancied horror, sees a crown and a throne, and everlasting blessings prepared for him, joyfully receives his summons, as he has long impatiently expected it. Wake.

JOYFULNESS. n. s. [from joyful.] Gladness; joy.

Thou servedst not the Lord thy God with joyful-ness, and with gladness of heart, for the abundance of all things. Deut.

JOYLESS. adj. [from joy.]

1. Void of joy; feeling no pleasure.

A little joy enjoys the queen thereof;
For I am she, and altogether joyless. Shakesp. R. III.

With down-cast eyes the joyless victor sat,
Revolving in his alter'd soul
The various turns of chance below:
And now add there a sigh he stole,
And tears began to flow. Dryd. Alexander's Feast.

2. It has sometimes of before the object.

IRE

With two fair eyes his mistress burns his breast;
He looks and languishes, and leaves his rest;
Forakes his food, and pining for the lass,
Is joyless of the grove, and spurns the growing grass.
Dryden.

3. Giving no pleasure.

A joyless, dismal, black, and sorrowful issue:
Here is a babe, as loathsome as a toad. Shakefp.

Here Love his golden shafts employs; here light
His constant lamp, and waves his purple wings;
Reigns here, and revels: not in the bought smiles
Of harlots, loveless, joyless, unendear'd, Casual fruition. Milton's Paradise Lost.

The pure in heart shall see God; and if any others could so invade this their inclosure, as to take heaven by violence, it surely would be a very joyless possession.
Decay of Piety.

He forgets his sleep, and loaths his food,
That youth, and health, and war are joyless to him.
Addison.

Jo'vous. adj. [joyeux, Fr.]

1. Glad; gay; merry.

Most joyous man, on whom the shining sun
Did shew his face, myself I did esteem,
And that my falser friend did no less joyous deem.
Fairy Queen.

Joyous the birds; fresh gales and gentle airs Whisper'd it. Milton.

Then joyous birds frequent the lonely grove,
And beats, by nature stung, renew their love. Dryd.
Fast by her flow'ry bank the sons of Arcas, Fav'rites of heav'n, with happy care protect Their fleecy charge, and joyous drink her wave. Prior.

2. Giving joy.

They all as glad as birds of joyous prime,
Thence led her forth, about her dancing round.
Fairy Queen.

3. It has of sometimes before the cause of joy.

Round our death-bed ev'ry friend should run,
And joyous of our conquest early won;
While the malicious world with envious tears
Should grudge our happy end, and wish it theirs.
Dryden.

IPERACUAN'HEM. n. f. [An Indian plant.]

Iperacuanha, is a small irregularly contorted root, rough, dense, and firm. One sort is of a dusky greyish colour on the surface, and of a paler grey when broken, brought from Peru: the other sort is of a smaller root, resembling the former; but it is of a deep dusky brown on the outside, and white when broken, brought from the Brasils. The grey ought to be preferred, because the brown is apt to operate more roughly. Hill's Matb. Med.

IRA'SCIBLE. adj. [irascibilis, low Lat. irascible, Fr.] Partaking of the nature of anger.

The irascible passions follow the temper of the heart, and the conspicuous distractions on the crasis of the liver. Brown.

I know more than one instance of irascible passions subdued by a vegetable diet. Arbutnot on Aliments.

We are here in the country surrounded with blessings and pleasures, without any occasion of exercising our irascible faculties. Digby to Pope.

IRE. n. f. [Fr. ira, Lat.] Anger; rage; passionate hatred.

She lik'd not his desire;
This would be free, but dreaded parents ire. Sidney.

If I digg'd up thy forefather's graver,
And hung their rotten coffins up in chains,
It could not flake mine ira, nor ease my heart. Shak.

Or Neptune's ire, or Juno's, that so long Perplex'd the Greek and Cytherea's son. Milton.

The sentence, from thy head remov'd, may light
On me, sole cause to thee of all this woe;
Mell me! only just object of his ira. Milton.

For this th' avenging pow'r employs his darts,
And empties all his quiver in our hearts;
Thus will persist, relentless in his ira,
Till the fair slave be render'd to her fire. Dryden.

IREFUL. adj. [ire and full.] Angry; raging; furious.

The ireful bastard Orleans, that drew blood
From thee, my boy, I soon encountered. Shakefp.

IRO

By many hands your father was subdu'd;
But only slaughter'd by the ireful arm
Of unrelenting Clifford. Shakefp. Henry VI.
There learn'd this maid, of arms the ireful guise.
Fairfax.

In midst of all the dome Misfortune sat,
And gloomy Discontent, and fell Debate,
And Madness laughing in his ireful mood. Dryden.

I'REFULLY. adv. [from ire.] With ire;
in an angry manner.

I'RIS. n. f. [Latin.]

1. The rainbow.

Beside the solary iris, which God sheweth unto Noah, there is another lunary, whose efficient is the moon. Brown.

2. Any appearance of light resembling the rainbow.

When both bows appeared more distinct, I measured the breadth of the interior iris 2 gr. 10'; and the breadth of the red, yellow, and green in the exterior iris, was to the breadth of the same colours in the interior 3 to 2. Newton's Opt.

3. The circle round the pupil of the eye.

4. The flower-de-luce.

Iris all hues, roses and jessamine. Milton.
To IRK. v. a. [yrk, work, Islandick.] This word is used only impersonally, it irks me; mibi pæne est, it gives me pain; or,
I am weary of it. Thus the authors of the accidence say, tædet, it irks.

Come, shall we go and kill us venison?
And yet it irks me, the poor dappled fools
Should, in their own confines, with forked heads,
Have their round haunches gor'd. Shakefp.

It irks his heart, he cannot be reveng'd. Shakefp.

I'RKSOME. adj. [from irk.] Wearisome; tedious; troublesome; toilsome; tire-some; unpleasing.

I know she is an irksome brawling scold. Shakefp.
Since that thou can'st talk of love so well,
Thy company, which erst was irksome to me,
I will endure. Shakefp. As you like It.

Where he may likeliest find Truce to his restless thoughts, and entertain
The irksome hours till his great chief return. Milton.

For not to irk some toil, but to delight
He made us, and delight to reason join'd. Milton.
There is nothing so irksome as general discourses, especially when they turn chiefly upon words.

Frequent appeals from hence have been very irksome to that illustrious body. Swift.

I'RKSOMELY. adv. [from irksome.] Wearisomely; tediously.I'RKSOMENESS. n. f. [from irksome.] Tediousness; wearisomeness.IRON. n. f. [haiarn, Welsh; irenn, iren, Saxon; iorn, Erse.]

1. A metal common to all parts of the world. Though the lightest of all metals except tin, it is considerably the hardest; and when pure, naturally malleable: when wrought into steel, or when in the impure state from its first fusion, it is scarce malleable. Most of the other metals are brittle, while they are hot; but this is most malleable as it approaches nearest to fusion. The specific gravity of iron is to water as 7632 is to 1000. It is the only known substance that is attracted by the loadstone. Iron has greater medicinal virtues than any of the other metals.
Hill.

Nor airless dungeon, nor strong links of iron,
Can be retentive to the strength of spirit. Shakefp.
If he smite him with an instrument of iron, so that he die, he is a murderer. Numb. xxv. 10.
The power of drawing iron is one of the ideas of a loadstone, and to be so drawn, is a part of that of iron.
Locke.

IRO

In a piece of iron ore, of a ferruginous colour, are several thin plates, placed parallel to each other.

There are incredible quantities of iron slag in various parts of the forest of Dean. Woodward.
Iron stone lies in strata. Woodward on Fossils.
I treated of making iron work, and steel work.
Moxon.

2. Any instrument or utensil made of iron: as, a flat iron, box iron, or smoothing iron. In this sense it has a plural.

Irons of a doit, doublets that hangmen would bury with those that wore them, these base slaves, Ere yet the fight be done, pack up. Shak. Coriolanus.
O Thou! whose captain I account myself,
Look on my forces with a gracious eye:

Put in their hands thy bruising irons of wrath,
That they may crush down with a heavy fall
Th' usurping helmets of our adversaries. Sh. R. III.

Can'st thou fill his skin with barbed irons, or his head with fishspears? Job, xli. 7.

For this your locks in paper-durance bound?
For this with tort'ring irons wreath'd around? Pope.

3. Chain; shackle; manacle: as, he was put in irons.

The iron entered into his soul. Psalms. Com. Prayer.
His feet they hurt with fetters: he was laid in irons. Ps.

I'RON. adj.

1. Made of iron.

In iron walls they deem'd me not secure. Shakefp.
Get me an iron crow, and bring it straight Unto my cell. Shakefp. Romeo and Juliet.
Some are of an iron red, shining and polite;
others not polite, but as-if powdered with iron dust.
Woodward.

Pole-cats and weasels do a great deal of injury to warrens; the way of taking them is in hatches, and iron traps. Mortimer.

2. Resembling iron in colour.

A piece of stone of a dark iron grey colour, but in some parts of a ferruginous colour. Woodward.
Some of them are of an iron red, and very bright.
Woodward on Fossils.

3. Harsh; severe; rigid; miserable; calamitous: as, the iron age for an age of hardship and wickedness. These ideas may be found more or less in all the following examples.

Three vigorous virgins, waiting still behind Assist the throne of th' iron scepter'd king. Crashaw.

O sad virgin, that thy power
Might bid the soul of Orpheus sing
Such notes as warbled to the string,
Drew iron tears from Pluto's cheek,
And made hell grant what love did seek. Milton.

In all my iron years of wars and dangers,
From blooming youth down to decaying age,
My fame ne'er knew a stain of dishonour. Rowe.
Jove crush the nations with an iron rod,
And ev'ry monarch be the scourge of God. Pope.

4. Indissoluble; unbroken.

Rash Elpenor, in an evil hour,
Dry'd an immeasurable bowl, and thought
T' exhale his surfeit by irriguous sleep,
Imprudent: him death's iron sleep oppress. Phillips.

5. Hard; impenetrable.

I will converse with iron-witted fools,
And unrespective boys: none are for me,
That look into me with considerate eyes. Shakefp.

To I'RON. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To smooth with an iron.

2. To shackle with irons.

IRO'NICAL. adj. [ironique, Fr. from irony.] Expressing one thing and meaning another; speaking by contraries.

In this fallacy may be comprised all ironical mistakes, or expressions receiving inverted significa-tions. Brown.

I take all your ironical civilities in a literal sense, and shall expect them to be literally performed.
Swift.

IRO'NICALLY. adv. [from ironical.] By the use of irony.

Socrates

Socrates was pronounced by the oracle of Delphos to be the wisest man of Greece, which he would turn from himself ironically, saying, There could be nothing in him to verify the oracle, except this, that he was not wise, and knew it; and others were not wise, and knew it not. Bacon.

The dean, ironically grave,
Still thunn'd the fool, and lash'd the knave. Swift.
IRONMONGER. n. s. [iron and monger.] A dealer in iron.

IRONWOOD. n. s. A kind of wood extremely hard, and so ponderous as to sink in water. It grows in America. Robinson Crusoe.

IRONWORT. n. s. [sideritis, Lat.] A plant. Miller.

IRONY. adj. [from iron.] Made of iron; partaking of iron.

The force they are under is real, and that of their fate but imaginary: it is not strange if the irony chains have more solidity than the contemplative. Hammond's Fundamentals.

Some springs of Hungary, highly impregnated with vitriolick salts, dissolve the body of one metal, suppose iron, put into the spring; and deposit, in lieu of the irony particles carried off, coppery particles. Woodward on Fossils.

IRONY. n. s. [ironie, Fr. ironia.] A mode of speech in which the meaning is contrary to the words: as, Bolingbroke was a holy man.

So grave a body, upon so solemn an occasion, should not deal in irony, or explain their meaning by contraries. Swift.

IRRA'DIANCE. } n. s. [irradiance, French; IRRA'DIANCY. } irradio, Latin.]

1. Emission of rays or beams of light upon any object.

The principal affection is its translucency: the irradiancy and sparkling, found in many gems, is not discoverable in this. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

2. Beams of light emitted.

Love not the heav'nly spirits? Or do they mix Irradiance virtual, or immediate touch? Milton.

TO IRRA'DIATE. v. a. [irradio, Latin.]

1. To adorn with light emitted upon it; to brighten.

When he thus perceives that these opacous bodies do not hinder the eye from judging light to have an equal plenary diffusion through the whole place it irradiates, he can have no difficulty to allow air, that is diaphanous, to be every where mingled with light. Digby on Bodies.

'It is not a converting but a crowning grace; such an one as irradiates and puts a circle of glory about the head of him upon whom it descends. South.

2. To enlighten; to illumine; to illuminate.

Celestial light
Shine inward, and the mind through all her pow'rs Irradiate; there plant eyes; all mist from thence Purge and disperse. Milton's Paradise Lost.

3. To animate by heat or light.

Ethereal or solar heat must digest, influence, irradiate, and put those more simple parts of matter into motion. Hale.

4. To decorate with shining ornaments.

No weeping orphan saw his father's store
Our shrines irradiate, or imblaze the floor. Pope.

IRRADIATION. n. s. [irradiation, Fr. from irradiate.]

1. The act of emitting beams of light.

If light were a body, it should drive away the air, which is likewise a body wherever it is admitted; for within the whole sphere of the irradiation of it, there is no point but light is found. Digby on Bodies.

The generation of bodies is not effected by irradiation, or answerably unto the propagation of light; but herein a transmission is made materially from some parts, and ideally from every one. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

2. Illumination; intellectual light.

The means of immediate union of these intelligible objects to the understanding, are sometimes divine and supernatural, as by immediate irradiation or revelation. Hale.

IRRA'TIONAL. adj. [irrationalis, Lat.]

1. Void of reason; void of understanding; wanting the discursive faculty.

Thus began
Outrage from lifeless things: but discord first Daughter of sin, among th' irrational
Death introduc'd. Milton's Paradise Lost.

He hath eat'n and lives,
And knows, and speaks, and reasons and discerns;
Irrational till then. Milton's Paradise Lost.

2. Absurd; contrary to reason.

Since the brain is only a part transmittent, and that humours oft are precipitated to the lungs before they arrive to the brain, no kind of benefit can be effected from so irrational an application. Harvey on Consumptions.

I shall quietly submit, not wishing so irrational a thing as that every body should be deceived. Pope.

IRRATIONALITY. n. s. [from irrational.]

Want of reason.

IRRA'TIONALLY. adv. [from irrational.]

Without reason; absurdly.

IRRECLAIMABLE. adj. [in and reclaimable.]

Not to be reclaimed; not to be changed to the better.

As for obstinate, irreclaimable, professed enemies, we must expect their calumnies will continue. Addison's Freeholder.

IRRECONCI'LEABLE. adj. [irreconcilable, Fr. in and reconcilable.]

1. Not to be recalled to kindness; not to be appeased.

Wage eternal war,
Irreconcilable to our grand foe. Milton.

A weak unequal faction may animate a government; but when it grows equal in strength, and irreconcilable by animosity, it cannot end without some crisis. Temple.

There are no factions, though irreconcilable to one another, that are not united in their affection to you. Dryden.

2. Not to be made consistent: it has with or to.

As she was strictly virtuous herself, so she always put the best construction upon the words and actions of her neighbours, except where they were irreconcilable to the rules of honesty and decency. Arbutnot's Hist. of John Bull.

Since the sense I oppose is attended with such gross irreconcilable absurdities, I presume I need not offer any thing farther in support of the one, or in disproof of the other. Rogers.

This essential power of gravitation or attraction is irreconcilable with the Atheist's own doctrine of a chaos. Bentley.

All that can be transmitted from the stars is wholly unaccountable, and irreconcilable to any system of science. Bentley.

IRRECONCI'LEABLENESS. n. s. [from irreconcilable.]

Impossibility to be reconciled.

IRRECONCI'LABLY. adv. [from irreconcilable.]

In a manner not admitting reconciliation.

IRRECONCI'LED. adj. [in and reconciled.]

Not atoned.

A servant dies in many irreconciled iniquities. Shakespeare.

IRRECO'VERABLE. adj. [in and recoverable.]

1. Not to be regained; not to be restored or repaired.

Time, in a natural sense, is irrecoverable: the moment just fled by us, it is impossible to recal. Rogers.

2. Not to be remedied.

The irrecoverable loss of so many livings of principal value. Hooker.

It concerns every man, that would not trifle away his soul, and fool himself into irrecoverable misery, with the greatest seriousness to enquire. Tillotson.

IRRECO'VERABLY. adv. [from irrecoverable.]

Beyond recovery; past repair.

O dark, dark, dark amid' the blaze of noon;
Irrecov'rably dark, total eclipse,
Without all hope of day. Milton's Agonistes.

The credit of the Exchequer is irrecoverably lost by the last breach with the bankers. Temple.

IRREDU'CIBLE. adj. [in and reducible.]

Not to be brought or reduced.

These observations seem to argue the corpuscles of air to be irreducible into water. Boyle.

IRREFRAGABI'LITY. n. s. [from irrefragable.]

Strength of argument not to be refuted.

IRREFRA'GABLE. adj. [irrefragabilis, school Latin; irrefragable, Fr.]

Not to be confuted; superior to argumental opposition.

Strong and irrefragable the evidences of Christianity must be: they who resisted them would resist every thing. Atterbury's Sermons.

The danger of introducing unexperienced men was urged as an irrefragable reason for working by slow degrees. Swift.

IRREFRA'GABLY. adv. [from irrefragable.]

With force above confutation.

That they denied a future state is evident from St. Paul's reasonings, which are of no force but only on that supposition, as Origen largely and irrefragably proves. Atterbury.

IRREFU'TABLE. adj. [irrefutabilis, Latin.]

Not to be overthrown by argument.

IRREGU'LAR. adj. [irregulier, Fr. irregularis, Latin.]

1. Deviating from rule, custom, or nature.

The am'rous youth
Obtain'd of Venus his desire,
Howe'er irregular his fire. Prior.

2. Immethodical; not confined to any certain rule or order.

This motion seems excentrique and irregular, yet not well to be resisted or quieted. King Charles.

Regular
Then most, when most irregular they seem. Milton.

The numbers of pindariques are wild and irregular, and sometimes seem harsh and uncouth. Cowley.

3. Not being according to the laws of virtue. A soft word for vicious.

IRREGULA'RITY. n. s. [irregularité, Fr. from irregular.]

1. Deviation from rule.

2. Neglect of method and order.

This irregularity of its unruly and tumultuous motion might afford a beginning unto the common opinion. Brown.

As these vast heaps of mountains are thrown together with so much irregularity and confusion, they form a great variety of hollow bottoms. Addison.

3. Inordinate practice; vice.

Religion is somewhat less in danger of corruption, while the sinner acknowledges the obligations of his duty, and is ashamed of his irregularities. Rogers.

IRREGULARLY. adv. [from irregular.]

Without observation of rule or method.

Phaeton,

By the wild couriers of his fancy drawn,
From East to West irregularly hurl'd,
First set on fire himself, and then the world. Dryd.

Your's is a soul irregularly great,
Which wanting temper, yet abounds with heat. Dryden.

It may give some light to those whose concern for their little ones makes them so irregularly bold as to consult their own reason, in the education of their children, rather than to rely upon old custom. Locke.

TO IRREGU'LATE. v. a. [from in and regula, Latin.]

To make irregular; to disorder.

Its fluctuations are but motions subservient, which winds, shelves, and every interjaency irregularates. Brown.

IRRELA'TIVE.

IRRELATIVE. adj. [in and relativus, Lat.] Having no reference to any thing; single; unconnected.

Separated by the voice of God, things in their species came out in uncommunicated varieties, and irrelativa feminilities. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

IRRELIGION. n. s. [irreligion, Fr. in and religion.] Contempt of religion; impiety.

The weapons with which I combat irreligion are already consecrated. Dryden.

We behold every instance of prophaneness and irreligion, not only committed, but defended and gloried in. Rogers.

IRRELIGIOUS. adj. [irreligieux, Fr. in and religions.]

1. Contemning religion; impious.

The issue of an irreligious Moor. Shakefp.

Whoever sees these irreligious men,

With burthen of a sickness weak and faint,

But hears them talking of religion then,

And vowing of their souls to ev'ry saint. Davies.

Shame and reproach is generally the portion of the impious and irreligious. South.

2. Contrary to religion.

Wherein that scripture standeth not the church of God in any stead, or serveth nothing at all to direct, but may be let pass as needless to be consulted with, we judge it profane, impious, and irreligious to think. Hooker.

Might not the queen's domesticks be obliged to avoid swearing, and irreligious profane discourse? Swift.

IRRELIGIOUSLY. adv. [from irreligious.]

With impiety; with irreligion.

IRREMEABLE. adv. [irremeneabilis, Latin.]

Admitting no return.

The keeper charm'd, the chief without delay

Pass'd on, and took th' irremeable way. Dryden.

IRREMEDIABLE. adj. [irremediable, Fr. in and remediable.]

Admitting no cure; not to be remedied.

They content themselves with that which was the irremediable error of former times, or the necessity of the present hath cast upon them. Hooker.

A steady hand, in military affairs, is more requisite than in peace, because an error committed in war may prove irremediable. Bacon.

Whatever he consults you about, unless it lead to some fatal and irremediable mischief, be sure you advise only as a friend. Locke.

IRREMEADIABLY. adv. [from irremediable.]

Without cure.

It happens to us irremediably and inevitably, that we may perceive these accidents are not the fruits of our labour, but gifts of God. Taylor's Worshy Comm.

IRREMISSIBLE. adj. [in and remitto, Lat.

irremissibile, French.] Not to be pardoned.

IRREMISSIBLNESS. n. s. [from irremissibile.]

IRREMOVABLE. adj. [in and remove.]

Not to be moved; not to be changed.

He is irremovable,

Resolv'd for flight. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.

IRRENO'WNED. adj. [in and renovui.]

Void of honour. We now say, unrenowned.

For all he did was to deceive good knights,

And draw them from pursuit of praise and fame

To sluggish sloth and sensual delights,

And end their days in irrenowned shame. Fairy Queen.

IRREPARABLE. adj. [irreparabilis, Latin;

irreparable, French.] Not to be recovered;

not to be repaired.

Irreparable is the loss, and Patience says it is not past her cure. Shakefp. Tempest.

Toil'd with loss irreparable. Milton.

It is an irreparable injustice we are guilty of, when we are prejudiced by the looks of those whom we do not know. Addison.

The story of Deucalion and Pyrrha teaches, that piety and innocence cannot miss of the divine protection, and that the only loss irreparable is that of our probity. Garth.

IRREPARABLY. adv. [from irreparable.]

Without recovery; without amends.

Such adventures befall artists irreparably. Boyle.

The cutting off that time industry and gifts, whereby she would be nourished, were irreparably

injurious to her. Decay of Piety.

making images of God. Stilling fleet.

IRREPRO'ACHABLE. adj. [in and reproach- able.] Free from blame; free from reproach.

He was a serious sincere Christian, of an innocent, irreproachable, nay, exemplary life. Atterbury.

Their prayer may be, that they may raise up and breed as irreproachable a young family as their parents have done. Pope.

IRREPRO'ACHABLY. adv. [from irreproach- able.] Without blame; without reproach.

IRREPROVEABLE. adj. [in and reproveable.]

Not to be blamed; irreproachable.

IRRESISTIB'LITY. n. s. [from irresistible.]

Power or force above opposition.

The doctrine of irresistibility of grace, if it be acknowledged, there is nothing to be affix to gratitude. Hammond.

IRRESISTIBLE. adj. [irresistible, Fr. in and resistible.] Superior to opposition.

Fear doth grow from an apprehension of the Deity, indued with irresistible power to hurt; and is of all affections, anger excepted, the unaptest to admit conference with reason. Hooker.

In mighty quadrate join'd

Of union irresistible. Milton.

Fear of God is inward acknowledgment of an holy just Being, armed with almighty and irresistible power. Tillotson.

There can be no difference in the subjects, where the application is almighty and irresistible, as in creation. Rogers.

IRRESISTIBLY. adv. [from irresistible.] In a manner not to be opposed.

God irresistibly sways all manner of events on earth. Dryden.

Fond of pleasing and endearing ourselves to those we esteem, we are irresistibly led into the same inclinations and aversions with them. Rogers.

IRRESISTLESS. adj. [A barbarous ungrammatical conjunction of two negatives.]

Irresistable; resistless.

Those radiant eyes, whose irresistless flame

Strikes Envy dumb, and keeps Sedition tame,

They can to gazing multitudes give law,

Convert the factious, and the rebel awe. Glanville.

IRRESOLUBLE. adj. [in and resolubilis.

Latin.] Not to be broken; not to be dissolved.

In factitious sal ammoniac the common and urinous salts are so well mingled, that both in the open fire and in subliming vessels they rise together

as one salt, which seems in such vessels irresoluble

by fire alone. Boyle.

IRRESOLUBLENESS. n. s. [from irresoluble.]

Resistance to separation of the parts.

Quercetanus, has this confession of the irresoluble- ness of diamonds. Boyle.

IRRESOLVEDLY. adv. [in and resolved.]

Without settled determination.

Divers of my friends have thought it strange to hear me speak so irresolvably concerning those things, which some take to be the elements, and others the principles of all mixed bodies. Boyle.

IRRESOLUTE. adj. [irresolu, Fr. in and resolute.] Not constant in purpose; not determined.

Where he evil us'd, he would outgo

His father, by as much as a performance

Does an irresolute purpose. Shakefp. Henry VIII.

Him after long debate, irresolute

Of thoughts resolv'd, his final sentence chose

Fit vessel, fittest imp of fraud, in whom

To enter. Milton's Paradise Lost.

To make reflections upon what is past, is the part of ingenious but irresolute men. Temple.

So Myrrha's mind, impell'd on either side,

Takes ev'ry bent, but cannot long abide;

Irresolute on which she should rely,

At last unfix'd in all, is only fix'd to die. Dryden.

IRRESOLUTELY. adv. [from irresolute.]

Without firmness of mind; without determined purpose.

IRRESOLUTION. n. s. [irresolution, Fr. in and resolution.] Want of firmness of mind.

It hath most force upon things that have the tightest motion, and therefore upon the spirits of men, and in them upon such affections as move lightest; as upon men in fear, or men in irresolution.

Bacon's Natural History.

Irresolution on the schemes of life, which offer themselves to our choice, and inconstancy in pursuing them, are the greatest causes of all our unhappiness. Addison.

IRRESPECTIVE. adj. [in and respective.]

Having no regard to any circumstances.

Thus did the Jew, by persuading himself of his particular irrespective election, think it safe to run into all sins! Ham.

According to this doctrine, it must be resolved wholly into the absolute irrespective will of God. Rogers.

IRRESPE'CTIVELY. adv. [from irrespective.]

Without regard to circumstances.

He is convinced, that all the promises belong to him absolutely and irrespectively. Hammond.

IRRETRIEVABLE. adj. [in and retrieve.]

Not to be repaired; irrecoverable; irreparable.

IRRETRIEVABLY. adv. [from irretrievable.]

Irreparably; irrecoverably.

It would not defray the charge of the extraction, and therefore must have been all irretrievably lost,

and useless to mankind, was it not by this means collected. Woodward.

IRREVERENCE. n. s. [irreverentia, Latin;

irreverence, French; in and reverence.]

1. Want of reverence; want of veneration; want of respect.

Having seen our scandalous Irreverence towards

God's worship in general, 'tis easy to make application to the several parts of it. Decay of Piety.

They were a sort of attributes, with which it was a matter of religion to salute them on all occasions, and which it was an irreverence to omit. Pope.

2. State of being disregarded.

The concurrence of the house of peers in that fury can be imputed to no one thing more than to the Irreverence and scorn the judges were justly in, who had been always looked upon there as the oracles of the law. Clarendon.

IRREVERENT. adj. [irreverent, Fr. in and reverent.] Not paying due homage or reverence; not expressing or conceiving

due veneration or respect.

As our fear excludeth not that boldness which be-cometh saints, so, if our familiarity with God do not favour of fear, it draweth too near that irreverent confidence wherewith true humility can never stand. Hooker.

Knowledge men sought for, and covered it from the vulgar sort as jewels of inestimable price, fearing the the irreverent construction of the ignorant and irreligious. Ruleigh.

Witness the irreverent son
Of him who built the ark; who, for the shame
Done to his father, heard his heavy curse,
Servant of servants, on his vicious race. Milton.
Swearing, and the irreverent using the name of God in common discourse, is another abuse of the tongue. Ray.

If an irreverent expression or thought too wanton are crept into my verses, through my inadvertency, let their authors be answerable for them. Dryden.

IRREVERENTLY. adv. [from irreverent.] Without due respect or veneration.

'Tis but an ill essay of reverence and godly fear to use the gospel irreverently. Gov. of the Tongue.

IRREVERSIBLE. adj. [in and reverse.] Not to be recalled; not to be changed.

The sins of his chamber and his closet shall be produced before men and angels, and an eternal irreversible sentence be pronounced. Rogers.

IRREVERSIBLY. adv. [from irreversible.] Without change.

The title of fundamentals, being ordinarily confined to the doctrines of faith, hath occasioned that great scandal in the church, at which so many myriads of Solifidians have stumbled, and fallen irreversibly, by conceiving heaven a reward of true opinions. Hammond on Fundamentals.

IRREVOCABLE. adj. [irrevocabilis, Latin; irrevocable, French.] Not to be recalled; not to be brought back; not to be reversed.

Give thy hand to Warwick,
And, with thy hand, thy faith irrevocable,
That only Warwick's daughter shall be thine. Shakespeare.

Firm and irrevocable is my doom,
Which I have past upon her. Shakespeare. As you like it.
That which is past is gone and irrevocable therefore they do but trifle, that labour in past matters. Bacon's Essays.

The second, both for piety renown'd,
And puissant deeds, a promise shall receive Irrevocable, that his regal throne
Forever shall endure. Milton's Paradise Lost.
By her irrevocable fate,
War shall the country waste, and change the state. Dryden.

The other victor flame a moment stood,
Then fell, and lifeless left th' extinguish'd wood:
For ever lost, th' irrevocable light
Forsook the black'ning coals, and sunk to night. Dryden.

Each sacred accent bears eternal weight,
And each irrevocable word is fate. Pope.
IRREVOCABLY. adv. [from irrevocable.] Without recall.

If air were kept out four or five minutes, the fire would be irrevocably extinguished. Boyle.

TO IRRIGATE. v. a. [irrigo, Latin.] To wet; to moisten; to water.

The heart, which is one of the principal parts of the body, doth continually irrigate, nourish, keep hot, and supple all the members. Ray on the Creation.
They keep a bulky charger near their lips,
With which, in often interrupted sleep,
Their frying blood compels to irrigate
Their dry furr'd tongues. A. Phillips.

IRRIGATION. n. s. [from irrigate.] The act of watering or moistening.

Help of ground is by watering and irrigation. Bacon.

IRRIGUOUS. adj. [from irrigate.]

1. Watery; watered.
The flow'ry lap
Of some irriguous valley spreads her store. Milton.

2. Dewy; moist. Phillips seems to have mistaken the Latin phrase irriguus sopor.
Rash Eleenor
Dry'd an immeasurable bowl, and thought
T' exhale his surfeit by irriguous sleep:
Imprudent! him death's iron sleep oppress. Phillips.

IRRI'SION. n. s. [irrisio, Latin; irrisson, Fr.]

The act of laughing at another.

Ham, by his indiscreet and unnatural irrisson, and exposing of his father, incurs his curse. Woodward.

TO IRRITATE. v. a. [irrito, Latin; irriter, French.]

1. To provoke; to reaze; to exasperate.
The earl, speaking to the freeholders in imperious language, did not irritate the people. Bacon.

Laud's power at court could not qualify him to go through with that difficult reformation, whilst he had a superior in the church, who, having the reins in his hand, could slacken them, and was thought to be the more remiss to irritate his cholerick disposition. Clarendon.

2. To fret; to put into motion or disorder by any irregular or unaccustomed contact; to stimulate; to vellicate.

Cold maketh the spirits vigorous, and irritateth them. Bacon.

3. To heighten; to agitate; to enforce.
Air, if very cold, irritateth the flame, and maketh it burn more fiercely, as fire scorseth in frosty weather. Bacon.

When they are collected, the heat becometh more violent and irritate, and thereby expelleth sweat. Bacon's Natural History.

Rous'd
By dash of clouds, or irritating war
Of fighting winds, while all is calm below,
They furious spring. Thomson's Summer.

IRRITATION. n. s. [irritatio, Latin; irritation, French; from irritare.]

1. Provocation; exasperation.
2. Stimulation; vellication.
Violent affections and irritations of the nerves, in any part of the body, is caused by something acrimonious. Arbutnot.

IRRUPTION. n. s. [irruption, Fr. irruptio, Latin.]

1. The act of any thing forcing an entrance.

I refrain, too suddenly,
To utter what will come at last too soon;
Left evil tidings, with too rude irruption,
Hitting thy aged ear, should pierce too deep. Milton.
There are frequent inundations made in maritime countries by the irruption of the sea. Burnet.
A full and sudden irruption of thick melancholick blood into the heart puts a stop to its pulsation. Harvey.

2. Inroad; burst of invaders into any place.

Notwithstanding the irruptions of the barbarous nations, one can scarce imagine how so plentiful a soil should become so miserably unpeopled. Addison.

IS. [is, Saxon. See To BE.]

1. The third person singular of To be: I am, thou art, he is.
He that is of God, heareth God's words. John. viii. 47.

Be not afraid of them, for they cannot do evil;
neither is it in them to do good. Jer. x. 5.
My thought, whose murmur yet is but tantalical,
Shakes so my single state of man, that function
Is smother'd in surmise; and nothing is,
But what is not. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

2. It is sometimes expressed by 's.
There's some among you have beheld me fighting. Shakespeare.

ISCHIA'DICK. adj. [ischia, ischia; ischia- dique, French.] In anatomy, an epithet to the crural vein; in pathology, the ischiadick passion is the gout in the hip, or the sciatica.

ISCHURY. n. s. [ischuria, ischu and ur, urine; ischurie, French; ischuria, Latin.]
A stoppage of urine, whether by gravel or other cause.

ISCHURE'TICK. n. s. [ischuretique, French;
from ischury.] Such medicines as force urine when suppressed.

ISH. [isc, Saxon.]

1. A termination added to an adjective to express diminution, a small degree, or incipient state of any quality: as, bluish, tending to blue; brightish, somewhat bright.

2. It is likewise sometimes the termination of a gentile or possessive adjective; as, Swedish, Danish, the Danish territories, or territories of the Danes.

3. It likewise notes participation of the qualities of the substantive to which it is added; as, fool, foolish; man, manish; rogue, roguish.

ISICLE. n. s. [More properly icicle, from ice; but ice should rather be written ise;
isr, Saxon.] A pendent shoot of ice.

Do you know this lady?
—The moon of Rome; chaste as the isicle
That's curdled by the frost from purest snow Hanging on Dian's temple. Shakespeare.

The frosts and snows her tender body spare;
Those are not limbs for isicles to tear. Dryden.

ISINGLA'SS. n. s. [from ice, or ise, and glass;
ichthyocola, Latin.]

Isinglass is a tough, firm, and light substance; of a whitish colour, and in some degree transparent, much resembling glue. The fish from which is- inglass is prepared, is one of the cartilaginous kind: it grows to eighteen and twenty feet in length, and greatly resembles the sturgeon. It is frequent in the Danube, the Boristhenes, the Volga, and the larger rivers of Europe. From the intestines of this fish the isinglass is prepared by boiling. Hill.

The cure of putrefaction requires an incrustating diet, as all viscid broths, hartshorn, ivory, and isinglass. Floyer.

Some make it clear by reiterated fermentations, and others by additions, as isinglass. Mortimer.

ISINGLASS Stone. n. s. A fossil which is one of the purest and simplest of the natural bodies. The masses are of a brownish or reddish colour; but when the plates are separated, they are perfectly colourless, and more bright and pellucid than the finest glass. It is found in Muscovy, Persia, the island of Cyprus, in the Alps and Apennines, and the mountains of Germany. Hill's Mat. Med.

ISLAND. n. s. [insula, Latin; isola, Ital.
ealand, Erse. It is pronounced iland.]
A tract of land surrounded by water.

He will carry this island home in his pocket, and give it his son for an apple.—And sowing the kernels in the sea, bring forth more islands. Shakespeare's Tempest.

Within a long recess there lies a bay,
An island shades it from the rolling sea,
And forms a port. Dryden.

Island of bliss! amid' the subject seas. Thomson.

ISLANDER. n. s. [from island. Pronounced ilander.] An inhabitant of a country surrounded by water.

We, as all islanders, are lunares, or the moon's men. Camden.

Your dinner, and the generous islanders
By you invited do attend your presence. Shakespeare.

There are many bitter sayings against islanders
in general, representing them as fierce, treacherous, and inhospitable: those who live on the continent have such frequent intercourse with men of different religions and languages, that they become more kind than those who are the inhabitants of an island. Addison's Freeholder.

A race of rugged mariners are these,
Unpolish'd men, and boist'rous as their seas;
The native islanders alone their care,
And hateful he that breathes a foreign air. Pope.

ISLE. n. s. [isle, French; insula, Latin.
Pronounced ile.]

1. An island; a country surrounded by water.

The instalment of this noble duke
In the seat royal of his famous isle. Shakefp.
The dreadful fight

Betwixt a nation and two whales I write;
Seas stain'd with gore I sing, advent'rous toil,
And how these monsters did disarm an isle. Waller.

2. [Written, I think, corruptly for isle, from isle, Fr. from ala, Latin, the isle being probably at first only a wing or side walk. It may come likewise from allée, French, a walk.] A long walk in a church or public building.

O'er the twilight groves and dusky caves,
Long sounding isses and intermingled graves
Black melancholy fits. Pope.

ISOPERIMETRIC. n. f. [isop, περί, and μετρον,] In geometry, are such figures as have equal perimeters or circumferences, of which the circle is the greatest. Harris.

ISOsceles. n. f. [isofcele, Fr. or equiangular triangle.] That which hath only two sides equal. Harris.

ISSUE. n. f. [issue, French.]

1. The act of passing out.

2. Exit; egress; or passage out.

Unto the Lord belong the issues from death.

Let us examine what bodies touch a moveable whilst in motion, as the only means to find an issue out of this difficulty. Digby on Bodies.

We might have easily prevented those great returns of money to France; and if it be true the French are so impoverished, in what condition must they have been, if that issue of wealth had been stopped? Swift.

3. Event; consequence.

Spirits are not finely touch'd,
But to fine issues. Shakefp. Meas. for Meas.
If I were ever fearful

To do a thing, where I the issue doubted, Whereof the execution did cry out Against the non-performance, 'twas a fear
Which oft infects the wisest. Shakefp. Winter's Tale.
But let the issue correspondent prove

To good beginnings of each enterprise. Fairfax.
If things were cast upon this issue, that God should never prevent sin till man deserved it, the best would sin, and sin for ever. South.

The wittiest sayings and sentences will be found the issues of chance, and nothing else but so many lucky hits of a roving fancy. South.
Our present condition is better for us in the issue, than that uninterrupted health and security that the Atheist desires. Bentley.

4. Termination; conclusion.

He hath preserved Argalus alive, under pretence of having him publicly executed after these wars, of which they hope for a soon and prosperous issue. Sidney.

What issue of my love remains for me!
How wild a passion works within my breast!
With what prodigious flames am I possest! Dryden.
Homer, at a loss to bring difficult matters to an issue, lays his hero asleep, and this solves the difficulty. Broome.

5. Sequel deduced from premises.

I am to pray you not to strain my speech
To grosser issues, nor to larger reach,
Than to suspicion. Shakefp. Othello.

6. A fontanel; a vent made in a muscle for the discharge of humours.

This tumour in his left arm was caused by strict binding of his issue. It isman.

7. Evacuation.

A woman was diseased with an issue of blood. Mat. ix. 20.

3. Progeny; offspring.

O nation miserable
Since that the truest issue of thy throne,
By his own interdiction stands accurst.
Shakefp. Macbeth.

Nor where Abassin kings their issue guard,
Mount Amara, though this by some suppos'd
True Paradise, under the the Æthiop line
By Nilus' head. Milton's Paradise Lost.
This old peaceful prince, as Heav'n decreed,
Was blest'd with no male issue to succeed.

The frequent productions of monsters, in all the species of animals, and strange issues of human birth, carry with them difficulties, not possible to consist with this hypothesis. Locke.

9. [In law.] Issue hath divers applications in the common law: sometimes used for the children begotten between a man and his wife; sometimes for profits growing from an amercement, fine, or expences of suit; sometimes for profits of lands or tenements; sometimes for that point of matter depending in suit, whereupon the parties join and put their cause to the trial of the jury. Issue is either general or special: general issue seemeth to be that whereby it is referred to the jury to bring in their verdict, whether the defendant have done any such thing as the plaintiff layeth to his charge. The special issue then must be that, where special matter being alleged by the defendant for his defence, both the parties join thereupon, and so grow rather to a demurrer, if it be quæstio juris, or to trial by the jury, if it be quæstio facti. Cowel.
To ISSUE. v. n. [from the noun; issuer, French; uscire, Italian.]

1. To come out; to pass out of any place.

Waters issued out from under the threshold of the house. Exek.
From the utmost end of the head branches there issueth out a gummy juice. Raleigh's History.
Waters issu'd from a cave. Milton.
Ere Pallas issu'd from the thunderer's head,

2. To make an eruption; to break out.

Three of master Ford's brothers watch the door with pistols, that none should issue out, otherwise you might slip away. Shakefp.
See that none hence issue forth a spy. Milton.
Haste, arm your Ardians, issue to the plain;
With faith to friend, assault the Trojan train. Dryden.

At length there issu'd from the grove behind,
A fair assembly of the female kind. Dryden.
A buzzing noise of bees his ears alarms;
Straight issue through the sides assembling swarms. Dryden.

Full for the port the Ithacensians stand,
And suri their sails, and issue on the land. Pope's Odyssey.

3. To proceed as an offspring.

Of thy sons that shall issue from thee, which thou shalt beget, shall they take away. 2 Kings. xx. 18.

4. To be produced by any fund.

These altarges issued out of the offerings made to the altar, and were payable to the priesthood. Ayliffe's Parergon.

5. To run out in lines.

Pipes made with a belly towards the lower end, and then issuing into a straight concave again. Bacon.
To ISSUE. v. a.

1. To send out; to send forth.

A weak degree of heat is not able either to digest the parts or to issue the spirits. Bacon's Natural History.
The commissioners should issue money out to no other use. Temp.

2. To send out judicially or authoritatively. This is the more frequent sense. It is commonly followed by a particle, out or forth.

If the council issued out any order against them, or if the king sent a proclamation for their repair to their houses, some noblemen published a protestation. Clarendon.

Deep in a rocky cave he makes abode,
A mansion proper for a mourning god:
Here he gives audience, issuing out decrees
To rivers, his dependant deities. Dryden.

In vain the matter issues out commands,
In vain the trembling sailors ply their hands;
The tempest unforeseen prevents their care. Dryd.

They constantly wait in court to make a due return of what they have done, and to receive such other commands as the judge shall issue forth. Ayliffe's Parergon.

ISSUELESS. adj. [from issue.] Having no offspring; wanting descendants.

Carew, by virtue of this entail, succeeded to Hugh's portion, as dying issueless. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

I have done sin;

For which the Heavens, taking angry note,
Have left me issueless. Shakefp. Winter's Tale.

ISTHMUS. n. f. [isthmus, Latin.] A neck of land joining the peninsula to the continent.

There is a castle strongly seated on a high rock, which joineth by an isthmus to the land, and is impreguably fortified. Sandys's Travels.

The Assyrian empire stretcheth northward to that isthmus between the Euxine and the Caspian Seas. Brerewood on Languages.

O life, thou nothing's younger brother!
Thou weak built isthmus, that dost proudly rise
Up betwixt two eternities,
Yet can't not wave nor wi. Stain;
But broken and o'erwhelm'd the ocean meets again. Cowley.

Our church of England stands as Corinth between two seas, and there are some busy in cutting the isthmus, to let in both at once upon it. Stillingfleet.

Cleomenes thinking it more advisable to fortify, not the isthmus, but the mountains, put his design in execution. Creech.

Plac'd on this isthmus of a middle state,
A being darkly wise, and rudely great. Pope.

IT. pronoun. [Itz, Saxon.]

1. The neutral demonstrative. Used in speaking of things. For it, our ancestors used be, as the neutral pronoun; and for its they used his. Thus in the Accidence, a noun adjective is that which cannot stand by himself, but requireth another word to be joined with him to shew his signification.

Nothing can give that to another which it hath not itself. Bramhall against Hobbes.

Will our great anger learn to stoop so low?
I know it cannot. Cowley.

Tell me, O tell, what kind of thing is wit,
Thou who master art of it. Cowley.

His son, it may be, dreads no harm;
But kindly waits his father's coming home. Flatman.

The time will come, it will, when you shall know
The rage of love. Dryden.

How can I speak; or how, fir, can you hear?
Imagine that which you would most deplore,
And that which I would speak, is it or more. Dryden.

A mind so furnished, what reason has it to acquiesce in its conclusions? Locke.

The glory which encompassed them covered the place, and darted its rays with so much strength, that the whole fabrick began to melt. Addison.

If we find a greater good in the present constitution, than would have accrued either from the total privation of it, or from other frames and structures, we may then reasonably conclude, that the present constitution proceeded from an intelligent, and good being, that formed it that particular way out of choice. Bentley.

2. It is used absolutely for the state of a person or affair.

How is it with our general?
—Even so
As with a man by his own alms imprison'd,
And with his charity slain. Shakefp. Coriolanus.

3. It is used for the thing; the matter; the affair.

It's come to pass,
That tractable obedience is a slave
To each incensed will. Shakefp. Henry VIII.

4. It is sometimes expressed by 't.

He rallied, and again fell to 't;
For catching foe by nearer foot,
He lifted with such might and strength.
As would have hurl'd him thrice his length. Hudib.
The design it seems, is to avoid the dreadful imputation of pedantry. Swift.

5. It is used ludicrously after neutral verbs, to give an emphasis.

If Abraham brought all with him, it is not probable that he meant to walk it back again for his pleasure. Raleigh.

The Lacedemonians, at the straits of Thermopylae, when their arms failed them, fought it out with their nails and teeth. Dryden.

I have often seen people lavish it profusely in tricking up their children, and yet starve their minds. Locke.

The mole courses it not on the ground, like the rat or mouse, but lives under the earth. Addison.

Whether the charmer sinner it, or saint it,
If folly grows romantick, I must paint it. Pope.

6. Sometimes applied familiarly, ludicrously, or rudely to persons.

Let us after him.

Whose care is gone before to bid us welcome:
It is a peerless kinsman. Shakefp. Macbeth.

Do, child, go to it grandam, child:

Give grandam kingdom, and its grandam will Give it up him. Shakespeare's King John.

7. It is sometimes used of the first or second person, sometimes of more. This mode of speech, though used by good authors, and supported by the il y a of the French, has yet an appearance of barbarism.

Who was't came by?

—'Tis two or three, my lord, that bring you word Macduff is fled to England. Shakefp. Macbeth.

City,

'Tis I, that made thy widows. Shak. Coriolanus.

'Tis these that early taint the female soul. Pope.

ITCH. n. f. [gicha, Saxon.]

1. A cutaneous disease extremely contagious, which overspreads the body with small pustules filled with a thin serum, and raised, as microscopes have discovered, by a small animal. It is cured by sulphur.

Lust and liberty

Creep in the minds and marrow of our youths,
That 'gainst the stream of virtue they may strive,
And drown themselves in riot, itches, blains. Shak.

The Lord will smite thee with the scab and with the itch, whereof thou can't not be healed. Dent xxviii. 27.

As if divinity had catch'd
The itch on purpose to be scratch'd. Hudibras.

2. The sensation of uneasiness in the skin, which is eased by rubbing.

3. A constant teasing desire.

A certain itch of meddling with other people's matters, puts us upon shifting. L'Estrange.

He had still pedigree in his bead, and an itch of being thought a divine king. Dryden.

From servant's company a child isto be kept, not not by prohibitions, for that will but give him an itch after it, but by other ways. Locke.

At half mankind when gen'rous Manly raves,
All know 'tis virtue, for he thinks them knaves:
When universal homage Umbra pays,
All see 'tis vice, and itch of vulgar praise. Pope.

To ITCH. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To feel that uneasiness in the skin which is removed by rubbing.

A troublesome licking of the part was occasioned by want of transpiration. Wifeman's Surgery.

My right eye itches; some good luck is near;

Perhaps my Anaryllus may appear. Dryden.

Perhaps my Anaryllus may appear. Dryden.

Perhaps my Anaryllus may appear. Dryden.

Perhaps my Anaryllus may appear. Dryden.

Perhaps my Anaryllus may appear. Dryden.

Perhaps my Anaryllus may appear. Dryden.

Perhaps my Anaryllus may appear. Dryden.

Perhaps my Anaryllus may appear. Dryden.

Perhaps my Anaryllus may appear. Dryden.

Perhaps my Anaryllus may appear. Dryden.

2. To long; to have continual desire. This sense appears in the following examples, though some of them are equivocal.

Master Shallow, you have yourself been a great fighter, though now a man of peace. Mr. Page, though now I be old, and of the peace, if I see a sword out, my finger itches to make one. Shakefp.
Cassius, you yourself

Are much condemn'd to have an itching palm,
To sell and mart your offices for gold. Shakefp.

The itching ears being an epidemick disease, gave fair opportunity to every mountebank. Decay of Piety.

All such have still an itching to deride,
And fain would be upon the laughing side. Pope.

ITCHY. adj. [from itch.] Infected with the itch.

ITEM. adv. [Latin.] Also. A word used when any article is added to the former.

ITEM. n. f.

1. A new article.

I could have looked on him without the help of admiration, though the catalogue of his endowments had been tabled by his side and I to peruse him by items. Shakefp.

2. A hint; an inuendo.

If this discourse have not concluded our weaknes, I have one item more of mine: if knowledge can be found, I must lose that which I thought I had, that there is none. Glanv.

To ITERATE. v. a. [itero, Lat.]

1. To repeat; to utter again; to inculcate by frequent mention.

We covet to make the psalms especially familiar unto all: this is the very cause why we iterate the Psalms oftener than any other part of Scripture besides: the cause wherefore we inure the people together with their minister, and not the minister alone, to read them, as other parts of Scripture he doth. Hooker.

In the first ages God gave laws unto our fathers, and their memories served instead of books; whereof the imperfections being known to God, he relieved the same by often putting them in mind: in which respect we see how many times one thing hath been iterated into the best and wisest. Hooker.

The king, to keep a decency towards the French king, sent new solema ambassadors to intimate unto him the decree of his estates, and to iterate his motion that the French would desist from hostility. Bacon's Henry VII.

There be two kinds of reflections of sounds; the one at distance, which is the echo, wherein the original is heard distinctly, and the reflection also distinctly: the other in concurrence, when the sound returneth immediately upon the original, and so iterates it not, but amplifieth it. Bacon.

2. To do over again.

Aches burnt, and well reverberated by fire, after the salt thereof hath been drawn out by iterated decoctions. Brown.

Adam took no thought,
Eating his fill; nor Eve to iterate
Her former trespass fear'd, the more to sooth
Him with her lov'd society. Milton's Paradise Lost.

ITERANT. adj. [iterans,] Lat. Repeating.

Waters being near, make a current echo; but being farther off, they make an iterant echo.

Bacon's Natural History.

ITERATION. n. f. [iteration, Fr. iteratio, Lat.] Repetition; recital over again.

Truth tir'd with iteration

As true as steel, as plantage to the moon. Shakefp.

My husband!

—Ay, 'twas he that told me first.

—My husband!

—What needs this iteration, woman?

I say, thy husband. Shakefp. Othello.

Iterations are commonly loss of time; but there is no such gain of time, as to iterate often the state of the question; for it chafeth away many a frivolous speech. Bacon's Essays.

In all these respects, it hath a peculiar property to engage the receiver to persevere in all piety, and is farther improved by the frequent iteration and repetition. Hammond.

ITINERANT. adj. [itinerant, Fr.] Wandering; not settled.

It should be my care to sweeten and mellow the voices of itinerant tradesmen, as also to accomodate their cries to their respective wares. Addis. Spect.

ITINERARY. n. f. [itineraire, Fr. itinerarium, Lat.] A book of travels.

The clergy are sufficiently reproached, in most itineraries, for the universal poverty one meets with in this plentiful kingdom. Addison on Italy.

ITINERARY. adj. [itineraire, Fr. itinerarius, Lat.] Travelling; done on a journey; done during frequent change of place.

He did make a progress from Lincoln to the northern parts, though it was rather an itinerary circuit of justice than a progress. Bacon's Henry VII.

ITSELF. pronoun. [it and self.] The neutral reciprocal pronoun applied to things.

JU'RIST. n. f. [juriste, Fr. jura, Lat.] A civil lawyer; a man who professes the science of the law; a civilian.

This is not to be measured by the principles of jurists. Bacon.

JU'ROR. n. f. [juro, Latin.] One that serves on the jury.

Were the jurors picked out of choice men, the evidence will be as deceitful as the verdict.

JUR

Spenser on Ireland.

I shall find your lordship judge and juror, You are so merciful, I see your end,

'Tis my undoing. Shakespeare. Henry VIII.

I sing no harm, good sooth! to any wight, Juror, or judge. Donne.

About noon the jurors went together, and because they could not agree, they were shut in. Hayward.

JU'RY. n. f. [jurata, Lat. juré, French.]

Jury, a company of men, as twenty-four, or twelve, sworn to deliver a truth upon such evidence as shall be delivered them touching the matter in question. There be three manners of trials in England: one by parliament, another by battle, and the third by assize or jury. The trial by assize, be the action civil or criminal, publick or private, personal or real, is referred for the fact to a jury, and as they find it, so passeth the judgment. This jury is used not only in circuits of justices errant, but also in other courts, and matters of office, as, if the escheatour make inquisition in any thing touching his office, he doth it by a jury of inquest: if the coroner inquire how a subject found dead came to his end, he useth an inquest: the justices of peace in the quarter-sessions, the sheriff in his county and turn, the bailiff of a hundred, the steward of a court-leet or court-baron, if they inquire of any offence, or decide any cause between party and party, they do it by the same manner: so that where it is said, that all things be triable by parliament, battle, or assize; assize, in this place, is taken for a jury or inquest, empannelled upon any cause in a court where this kind of trial is used. This jury, though it appertain to most courts of the common law, yet it is most notorious in the half-year courts of the justices errants, commonly called the great assizes, and in the quarter-sessions, and in them it is most ordinarily called a jury, and that in civil causes; whereas in other courts it is often termed an inquest. In the general assize, there are usually many juries, because there be store of causes, both civil and criminal, commonly to be tried, whereof one is called the grand jury, and the rest petit juries. The grand jury consists ordinarily of twenty-four grave and substantial gentlemen, or some of them yeomen, chosen indifferently out of the whole shire by the sheriff, to consider of all bills of indictment preferred to the court; which they do either approve by writing upon them these words, billa vera, or disallow by writing ignoramus. Such as they do approve, if they touch life and death, are farther referred to another jury to be considered of, because the case is of such importance; but others of lighter moment are, upon their allowance, without more work, tried by the bench, except the party traverse the indictment, or challenge it for insufficiency, or remove the cause to a higher court by certiorari; in which two former cases it is referred to another jury, and in the latter transmitted to the higher court. Those that pass upon civil causes real, are all, or so many as can conveniently be had, of the same hundred where the land or tenement in question doth lie, and four at the least; and they, upon due examination, bring in their verdict either for the demandant or tenant: according unto which, judgment passeth afterward in the court where the cause first began; and the reason hereof is, because those justices of assize are, in this case, for the ease of the countries only to take the verdict of the jury by the virtue of the writ called nisi prius, and so return it to the court where the cause is depending. Cowel.

The jury passing on the prisoner's life, May in the sworn twelve have a thief or two Guiltier than him they try. Shakespeare's Measure for Measure.

How innocent I was, His noble jury and soul cause can witness. Shakespeare.

Clodius was acquitted by a corrupt jury, that had palpably taken shares of money before they gave up their verdict. Bacon.

JU'RYMAN. n. f. [jury and man.] One who is impannelled on a jury.

The hungry judges soon the sentence sign, And wretches hang that jurymen may dine. Pope.

No judge was known, upon or off the bench, to use the least insinuation, that might affect the interests

Interests of any one single juryman, much less of a whole jury. Swift.

JURYMAST. n. f. It seems to be properly durée mast, mât de durée, a mast made to last for the present occasion. So the seamen call whatever they set up in the room of a mast lost in a fight or by a storm; being some great yard which they put down into the step of that lost mast, fastening it into the partners, and fitting to it the missen or some lesser yard with sails and ropes, and with it make a shift to sail. Harris.

JUST. adj. [juste, Fr. justus, Latin.]

1. Upright; incorrupt; equitable in the distribution of justice.

Take it, while yet 'tis praise, before my rage
Unsafely just, break loose on this bad age. Dryden.

Boileau's numbers are excellent, his expressions noble, his thoughts just, his language pure, and his sense close. Dryden.

These scenes were wrought,
Embellish'd with good morals and just thought. Granville.

Just precepts thus from great examples giv'n,
She drew from them what they deriv'd from Heav'n. Pope.

Just to the tale, as present at the fray,
Or taught the labours of the dreadful way. Pope.
Once on a time La Mancha's knight, they say,
A certain bard encount'ring on the way,
Discours'd in terms as just, with looks as sage,
As e'er could Dennis of the laws o' th' stage. Pope.
Though the syllogism be irregular, yet the inferences are just and true. Watts's Logick

5. Virtuous; innocent; pure.

How should man be just with God? Job.
A just man falleth seven times and riseth. Proverbs.
He shall be recompenced at the resurrection of the just. Matt.

But just inspir'd and gently swell'd the sail. Dryden.

Give me, ye gods, the product of one field,
That so I neither may be rich nor poor;
And having just enough, not covet more. Dryden.

3. Nearly; almost; tantum non.

Being spent with age, and just at the point of death,
Democritus called for loaves of new bread to be brought, and with the steam of them under his nose prolonged his life. Temple.

JUST. n. f. [jouste, French.] Mock encounter on horseback; tilt; tournament. Just more proper.

None was either more grateful to the beholders, or more noble in itself, than justs, both with sword and lance. Sidney.

What news? hold those justs and triumphs? Shakespeare.

Among themselves the tourney they divide,
In equal squadrons rang'd on either side;
Then turn'd their horses heads, and man to man,
And steed to steed oppos'd, the justs began. Dryden.

TO JUST. v. n. [jouster, French.]

1. To engage in a mock fight; to tilt.

2. To push; to drive; to juggle.

JUSTICE. n. f. [justice, French; justitia, Latin.]

1. The virtue by which we give to every man, what is his due; opposed to injury or wrong. It is either distributive, belonging to magistrates; or commutative, respecting common transactions between men.

O that I were judge, I would do justice. 2 Sam.
The king-becoming graces,
As justice, verity, temperance, stableness,
I have no relish of them. Shakespeare. Macbeth.

The nature and office of justice being to dispose the mind to a constant and perpetual readiness to render to every man his due, it is evident, that if gratitude be a part of justice, it must be conversant about something that is due to another. Locke.

2. Equity; agreeableness to right: as, he proved the justice of his claim.

3. Vindicative retribution; punishment; opposed to mercy.

He executed the justice of the Lord. Deut.
Let justice overtake us. Isa. lix. 9.

Examples of justice must be made for terror to some; examples of mercy, for comfort to others. Bacon's Advice to Villiers.

4. Right; assertion of right.

Draw thy sword,
That if my speech offend a noble heart,
Thy arm may do thee justice. Shakespeare. King Lear.

5. [Justiciarius, Lat.] One deputed by the king to do right by way of judgment. Cowel.

And thou, Eldras, ordain judges and justices, that they may judge in all Syria. 1 Esdras.

6. JUSTICE of the King's Bench. [justiciarius de Banco Regis.] Is a lord by his office, and the chief of the rest; wherefore he is also called capitalis justiciarius Angliæ. His office especially is to hear and determine all pleas of the crown; that is, such as concern offences committed against the crown, dignity, and peace of the king; as treasons, felonies, mayhems, and such like: but it is come to pass, that he with his assistants heareth all personal actions, and real also, if they be incident to any personal action depending before them. Cowel.

Give that whipster his errand,
He'll take my lord chief justice's warrant. Prior.

7. JUSTICE of the Common Pleas. [justiciarius Communium Placitorum.] Is a lord by his office, and is called dominus justiciarius communium placitorum. He with his assistants originally did hear and determine all causes at the common law; that is, all civil causes between common persons, as well personal as real; for which cause it was called the court of common pleas, in opposition to the pleas of the crown, or the king's pleas, which are special, and appertaining to him only. Cowel.

8. JUSTICE of the Forest. [justiciarius Forestæ.] Is a lord by his office, and hath the hearing and determining of all offences within the king's forest, committed against venison or vert; of these there be two, whereof the one hath jurisdiction over all the forests on this side Trent, and the other of all beyond. Cowel.

9. JUSTICES of Assise. [justicarii ad capiendas Assisas.] Are such as were wont, by special commission, to be sent into this or that country to take assises; the ground of which polity was the ease of the subjects; for whereas these actions pass always by jury, so many men might not, without great hinderance, be brought to London; and therefore justices, for this purpose, were by commission particularly authorised and sent down to them. Cowel.

10. JUSTICES in Eyre. [justicarii itinerantes.] Are so termed of the French erre, iter. The use of these, in ancient time, was to send them with commission into divers counties; to hear such causes especially as were termed the pleas of the crown, and therefore I must imagine they were sent abroad for the ease of the subjects, who must else have been hurried to the King's Bench, if the cause were too high for the county court. They differed from the justices of Oyer and Terminer, because they were sent upon some one or few especial cases, and to one place; whereas the justices in eyre were sent through the provinces and countries of the land, with more indefinite and general commission. Cowel.

11. JUSTICES.

11. JUSTICES of Gaol Delivery. [Justiciarii ad Gaolas deliberandas.] Are such as are sent with commission to hear and determine all causes appertaining to such as for any offence are cast into gaol, part of whose authority is to punish such as let to mainprise those prisoners that by law be not bailable. These by likelihood, in ancient time, were sent to countries upon several occasions; but afterward justices of assize were likewise authorised to this. Cowel.

12. JU'STICES of Nisi Prius are all one now-a-days with justices of assize; for it is a common adjournment of a cause, in the common pleas, to put it off to such a day: nisi prius justiciarii venerint ad eas partes ad capiendas assisas; and upon this clause of adjournment they are called justices of nisi prius, as well as justices of assize, by reason of the writ or action that they have to deal in. Cowel.

13. JU'STICES of Peace. [Justiciarii ad Pacem.] Are they that are appointed by the king's commission, with others, to attend the peace of the country where they dwell; of whom some, upon especial respect, are made of the quorum, because some business of importance may not be dealt in without the presence of them, or one of them. Cowel.

The justice,

In fair round belly with good capon lin'd,
With eyes severe, and beard of formal cut,
Full of wise saws and modern instances,
And so he plays his part. Shakesp. As you like it.

Thou hast appointed justices of the peace to call poor men before them, about matters they were not able to answer. Shakesp.

The justices of peace are of great use: anciently they were conservators of the peace; these are the same, saving that several acts of parliament have enlarged their jurisdiction. Bacon.

To JU'STICE. v. a. [from the noun.] To administer justice to any. A word not in use.

As for the title of proserption, wherein the emperor hath been judge and party, and hath justified himself, God forbid but that it should endure an appeal to a war. Bacon.

Whereas one Styward, a Scot, was apprehended for intending to poison the young queen of Scots; the king delivered him to the French king, to be justified by him at his pleasure. Hayward.

JU'STICEMENT. n. s. [from justice.] Procedure in courts.

JU'STICER. n. s. [from To justice.] Administrator of justice. An old word.

He was a singular good justicer; and if he had not died in the second year of his government, was the likeliest person to have reformed the English colonies. Davies on Ireland.

JU'STICESHIP. n. s. [from justice.] Rank or office of justice. Swift.

JUSTI'CIABLE. adj. [from justice.] Proper to be examined in courts of justice.

JU'STIPIABLE. adj. [from justify.] Defensible by law or reason.

Just are the ways of God,
And justifiable to men. Milton's Agonistes.

Although some animals in the water do carry a justifiable resemblance to some at land, yet are the major part which bear their names unlike. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

JU'STIFIABLENESS. n. s. [from justifiable.] Rectitude; possibility of being fairly defended.

VOL. I.

Men, jealous of the justifiableness of their doings before God, never think they have human strength enough. King Charles.

JU'STIPIABLY. adv. [from justifiable.] Rightly; so as to be supported by right; defensibly.

A man may more justifiably throw cross and pile for his opinions, than take them up by such measures. Locke.

JUSTIFICATION. n. s. [justification, Fr. justificatio, low Latin.]

1. Absolution.

I hope, for my brother's justification, he wrote this but as an essay of my virtue. Shakespeare.

2. Defence; maintenance; vindication; support.

Among theological arguments, in justification of absolute obedience, was one of a singular nature. Swift.

3. Deliverance by pardon from sins past.

Clarke.

In such righteousness

To them by faith imputed, they may find

Justification towards God, and peace

Of conscience. Milton's Paradise Lost.

'Tis the consummation of that former act of faith by this latter, or, in the words of St. Paul and St. James, the consummation of faith by charity and good works, that God accepteth in Christ to justification, and not the bare aptness of faith to bring forth works, if those works, by the fault of a rebellious infidel, will not be brought forth. Hammond.

JUSTIFICATION. n. s. [from justify.] One who supports, defends, vindicates, or justifies.

JU'STIFIER. n. s. [from justify.] One who justifies; one who defends or absolves; one who frees from sin by pardon.

That he might be just, and the justifier of him which believeth in Jesus. Rom. iii. 26.

To JUSTIFY. v. a. [justifier, French; justifico, low Latin.]

1. To clear from imputed guilt; to absolve from an accusation.

The law hath judg'd thee, Eleanor;

I cannot justify whom law condemns. Shakespeare.
Thy lay, behold a man gluttonous, a friend of publicans and sinners; but wisdom is justified of her children. Mutt.

How can man be justified with God? Or how can he be clean that is born of a woman? Job.

There is an exquisite subtilty, and the same is unjust; and there is a wise man that justifies in judgment. Eccles.

Sin may be forgiven through repentance, but no act or wit of man will ever justify them. Sherlock.

You're neither justified, nor yet accus'd. Dryden.

2. To maintain; to defend; to vindicate.

When we began in courteous manner to lay his unkindness unto him, he seeing himself confronted by so many, like a resolute orator, went not to denial, but to justify his cruel falsehood. Sidney.

What she did, whatever in itself, He doing seem'd to justify the deed. Milton.

My unwilling flight the gods inforce, And that must justify our sad divorce. Denham.

Yet still thy fools shall stand in thy defence, And justify their author's want of sense. Dryden.

Let others justify their millions as they can, we are sure we can justify that of our fathers by an uninterrupted succession. Atterbury.

3. To free from past sin by pardon.

By him all that believe are justified from all things, from which ye could not be justified by the law of Moses. Acts.

To JU'STLE. v. n. [from just, justler, Fr.] To encounter; to clash; to rush against each other.

While injury of chance

Puts back leave-taking, justles roughly by
All time of pause, rudely beguiles our lips
Of all rejoiture. Shakesp. Troilus and Cressida.

The chariots shall rage in the streets, they shall justle one against another in the broad ways. Nab. ij. 4.

Argo pass'd,
Through Bosphorus, betwixt the justling rocks. Milton.

Late the clouds

Justling, or push'd with winds, rude in their shock, Tine the flant lightning. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Not one starry spark,

But gods meet gods, and justle in the dark. Lee.
Courtiers therefore justle for a grant;
Aud, when they break their friendship, plead their want. Dryden.

The more remote run stumbling with their fear,
And, in the dark, men justle as they meet. Dryd.

When elephant 'gainst elephant did rear
His trunk, and castles justled in the air,
My sword thy way to victory had shown. Dryden.

Was there not one who had set bars and doors to it, and said, Hitherto shalt thou come, but no farther, and here shall thy proud waves be staid; then might we well expect such vicissitudes, such justlings and clashings in nature. Woodward.

I thought the dean had been too proud
To justle here among a croud. Swift.

To JU'STLE. v. a. To push; to drive; to force by rushing against it. It is commonly used with a particle following, as out or off.

Private and single abilities should not justle out and deprive the church of the joint abilities of many learned and godly men. King Charles.

Many excellent strains have been justled off by their intrusions. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

The surly commons shall respect deny,
And justle peerage out with property. Dryden.

It is not to be imagined that the incongruous alphabets and abuses of writing can ever be justled out of their possession of all libraries. Hilder.

Running in the dark, a man may justle a post. Collier.

Absent good, though thought on, not making any part of unhappiness in its absence, is justled out, to make way for the removal of those uneasinesses we feel. Locke.

We justled one another out, and disputed the post for a great while. Addison's Guardian.

JU'STLY. adv. [from just.]

1. Uprightly; honestly; in a just manner.

Nothing can justly be despised, that cannot justly be blamed: where there is no choice, there can be no blame. South.

With ignominy scourg'd, in open fight:
Next view the Tarquin kings; th' avenging sword

Of Brutus justly drawn, and Rome restor'd. Dryd.

The goddess, studious of her Grecians' fate,
Taught them in laws and letters to excel,
In acting justly, and in writing well. Prior.

2. Properly; exactly; accurately.

Their artful hands instruct the lute to sound,
Their feet assist their hands, and justly beat the ground. Dryd.

JU'STNESS. n. s. [from just.]

1. Justice; reasonableness; equity. Justness is properly applied to things, and justice to persons; though we now say the justice of a cause, as well as of a judge.

It maketh unto the right of the war against him, whose success useth commonly to be according to the justness of the cause for which it is made. Spenser on Ireland.

We may not think the justness of each act
Such and no other than event doth form it. Shakespeare.

2. Accuracy; exactness; propriety. In this sense it is now most used.

I value the satisfaction I had in seeing it represented with all the justness and gracefulness of action. Dryden.

I appeal to the people, was the usual saying of a very excellent dramatick poet, where he had any dispute with particular persons about the justness and regularity of his productions. Addison.

To JU'T. v. n. [This word is supposed to be corrupted from jet, perhaps from shoot.]

J U T

To push or shoot into prominencies; to come out beyond the main bulk.

Insulting tyranny begins to jut
Upon the innocent and awless throne. Shakespeare.
All the projected or jutting parts should be very moderate, especially the cornices of the lower orders. Wotton.

The land, if not restrain'd, had met your way,
Projected out a neck, and jutted to the sea. Dryden.

Broke by the jutting land on either side;
In double streams the briny waters glide. Dryden.

It seems to jut out of the structure of the poem, and be independent of it. Broome.

To JUTTY. v. a. [from jut.] To shoot out beyond.

Then lend the eye a terrible aspect;
Let it pry through the portage of the head
Like a brass cannon: let the brow o'erwhelm it
As fearfully as doth a galled rock
O'erhang and jutty his confounded base,
Swill'd with the wild and wasteful ocean. Shakespeare.

J U X

JUVENILE. adj. [juvenilis, Lat.] Young; youthful.

Learning hath its infancy when it is almost childish; then its youth, when it is luxuriant and juvenile; then its strength of years, when it is solid; and lastly, its old age, when it waxeth dry and exhaust. Bacon's Essays.

JUVENILITY. n. f. [from juvenile.]

1. Youthfulness.

The restoration of grey hairs to juvenility, and renewing exhausted marrow, may be effected without a miracle. Glanville.

2. Light and careless manner.

Customary strains and abstracted juvenilities have made it difficult to commend and speak credibly in dedications. Glanville.

JUXTAPOSITION. n. f. [juxtaposition, Fr. juxta and positio, Latin.] Apposition; the state of being placed by each other.

Nor can it be a difference, that the parts of solid bodies are held together by hooks, since the coherence of these will be of difficult conception; and we must either suppose an infinite number of them holding together, or at last come to parts that are united by a mere juxtaposition. Glanville.

J Y M

IVY. n. f. [iwig, Saxon; bedera, Latin.] A plant.

It is a parasitick plant, sending forth roots or fibres from its branches, by which it is fastened to either trees, walls, or plants which are near it, and from thence receives a great share of its nourishment. Miller.

A gown made of the finest wool;

A belt of straw, and ivy buds,

With coral clasps and amber studs;

And if these pleasures may thee move,

Come live with me and be my love. Raleigh.

Direct the clasping ivy where to climb. Milton.

JY'MOLD. adj. [See GIMAL.]

Their poor jades

Lob down their heads, dropping the hide and hips;

And in their pale dull mouths the jymold bit

Lies, foul with chew'd grass, still and motionless. Shakespeare.

K

K A M

K A letter borrowed by the English from the Greek alphabet. It has before all the vowels one invariable sound: as, keen, ken, kill. It is used after c at the end of words: as, knock, clock, crack, back, brick, stick, pluck, check, which were written anciently with c final: as, clocke, checke, tricke. It is also in use between a vowel and the silent c final: as, cloke, broke, brake, pike, duke, cke. It likewise ends a word after a diphthong: as, look, break, shook, leek. The English never use c at the end of a word. K is silent in the present pronunciation before n: as, knife, knee, knell.

KA'LENDAR. n. f. [now written calendar.] An account of time.

Let this pernicious hour

Stand ay accursed in the kalender. Shakespeare. Macb.

K'ALI. n. f. [an Arabick word.] Seaweed, of the ashes of which glass was made; whence the word alkali.

The ashes of the weed kali are sold to the Venetians for their glass works. Bacon.

KAM. adj. Crooked.

Kam, in Erse, is squint eyed, and applied to any thing awry: clean kam signifies crooked, athwart, awry, crows from the purpose. A-schembo, Italian; hence our English a-kimbo.

Clean kam is, by vulgar pronunciation, brought to kim-kam.

This is clean kam; merely awry. Shakespeare.

K E C

To KAW. v. n. [from the sound.] To cry as a raven, crow, or rook.

Jack-daws kawing and fluttering about the nests, set all their young ones a-gaping; but having nothing in their mouths but air, leave them as hungry as before. Locke.

KAW. n. f. [from the verb.] The cry of a raven or crow.

The daftard crow that to the wood made wing,
With her loud kawes her craven-kind doth bring,
Who, safe in numbers, cuff the noble bird. Dryd.

KAYLE. n. f. [quille, French.]

1. Ninepin; kettlepins, of which skittles seems a corruption.

And now at keels they try a harmless chance,
And now their cur they teach to fetch and dance. Sidney.

The residue of the time they wear out at coits, kayles, or the like idle exercises. Carw.

2. A kind of play still retained in Scotland, in which nine holes ranged in three's are made in the ground, and an iron bullet rolled in among them.

To KECK. v. a. [kecken, Dutch.] To heave the stomach; to reach at vomiting.

All those diets do dry up humours and rheums, which they first attenuate, and while the humour is attenuated it troubleth the body a great deal more; and therefore patients must not heck at them at the first. Bacon's Natural History.

The fashion, is it not notorious?

Keck at the memory of glorious. Swift.

Thou wast within a ken. Shakesp. Cymbeline.

It was a hill

Of paradise the highest; from whose top

The hemisphere of earth, in clearest ken,

Stretch'd out to th' amplest reach of prospect, lay. Milton.

He soon

Saw within ken a glorious angel stand. Milton.

Rude, as their ships, was navigation then;

No useful compass or meridian known:

Coasting, they kept the land within their ken,

And knew the North but when the pole-star shone. Dryden.

When we consider the reasons we have to think, that what lies within our ken is but a small part of the universe, we shall discover an huge abyss of ignorance. Locke.

KENNEL. n. f. [chenil, Fr.]

1. A cot for dogs.

A dog sure, if he could speak, had wit enough to describe his kennel. Sidney.

From forth the kennel of thy womb hath crept

A hell-hound, that doth hunt us all to death. Shakesp.

The seditious remain within their station, which,

by reason of the nastiness of the beastly multitude, might be more fitly termed a kennel than a camp. Hayward.

2. A number of dogs kept in a kennel.

A little herd of England's tim'rous deer,

Maz'd with a yelping kennel of French cure. Shakespeare.

3. The hole of a fox, or other beast.

4. [Keunel, Dutch; chenel, Fr. canalis,

Latin.] The watercourse of a street.

Bad humours gather to a bile; or, as divers kennels flow to one sink, so in short time their numbers increased. Hayward.

He always came in so dirty, as if he had been dragged through the kennel at a boarding-school. Arbutnot.

To KE'NNEL. v. n. [from kennel.] To lie;

to dwell; used of beasts, and of man in contempt.

Yet, when they list, would creep,

If ought disturb'd their noise, into her womb,

And kennel there: yet there still bark'd and howl'd

Within, unseen. Milton's Paradise Lost.

The dog kennelled in a hollow tree, and the cock roosted upon the boughs. L'Estrange.

With Peter's keys ennobled and his crown. Fairfax.

Yet some there be, that by due steps aspire
To lay their just hands on that golden key,
That opes the palace of eternity. Milton.

Conscience is its own counsellor, the sole master of its own secrets; and it is the privilege of our nature, that every man should keep the key of his own breast. South.

He came, and knocking thrice, without delay
The longing lady heard, and turn'd the key. Dryd.

2. An instrument by which something is screwed or turned.

Hide the key of the jack. Swift.

3. An explanation of any thing difficult.

An emblem without a key to't, is no more than a tale of a tub. L'Estrange.

These notions, in the writings of the ancients darkly delivered, receive a clearer light when compared with this theory, which represents every thing plainly, and is a key to their thoughts. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

Those who are accustomed to reason have got the true key of books. Locke.

4. The parts of a musical instrument which are struck with the fingers

Pamela loves to handle the spinnet, and touch the keys. Pamela.

KIC

5. [In musick.] Is a certain tone whereto every composition, whether long or short, ought to be fitted; and this key is said to be either flat or sharp, not in respect of its own nature, but with relation to the flat or sharp third, which is joined with it. Harris.

Hippolita, I won'd thee with my sword,
And won thy love doing thee injuries;
But I will wed thee in another key,
With pomp, with triumph, and with revelling. Shakefp.

But speak you with a sad brow? Or do you play the flouting Jack? Come, in what key shall a man take you to go in the song? Shakefp.

Not know my voice! Oh, time's extremity!
Hast thou so crack'd and splitted my poor tongue
In sev'n short years, that here my only son Knows not my feeble key of untun'd cares? Shakefp.

KIDNAPPER. n. f. [from kidnap.] One who steals human beings; a manstealer.

The man compounded with the merchant, upon condition that he might have his child again; for he had smelt it out, that the merchant himself was the kidnapper. L'Estrange.

These people lye in wait for our children, and may be considered as a kind of kidnappers within the law. Spectator.

KIDNEY. n. f. [Etymology unknown.]

1. These are two in number, one on each side: they have the same figure as kidneybeans: their length is four or five fingers, their breadth three, and their thickness two: the right is under the liver, and the left under the spleen. The use of the kidneys is to separate the urine from the blood, which, by the motion of the heart and arteries, is thrust into the emulgent branches, which carry it to the little glands, by which the serosity, being separated, is received by the orifice of the little tubes, which go from the glands to the pelvis, and from thence it runs by the ureters into the bladder. Quincy.

A youth laboured under a complication of diseases, from his mesentery and kidneys. Wifeman's Surgery.

2. Sort;

K I L

2. Sort; kind: in ludicrous language.

Think of that, a man of my kidney; thinks of that, that am as subject to heat as butter; a man of continual dissolution and thaw. Shakespeare.

KIND. adj. [from cynne, relation, Saxon.]

1. Benevolent; filled with general goodwill.

By the kind Gods, 'tis most ignobly done To pluck me by the beard. Shakespeare's King Lear. Some of the ancients, like kind-hearted men, have talked much of annual refrigeriums, or intervals of punishment to the damned, as particularly on the great festivals of the resurrection and ascension. South.

2. Favourable; beneficent.

He is kind to the unthankful and evil. Luke, vi. 35.

KIND. n. f. [cynne, Saxon.]

1. Race; generical class. Kind in Teutonic English answers to genus, and sort to species; though this distinction, in popular language, is not always observed.

Thus far we have endeavoured in part to open of what nature and force laws are, according to their kinds.

As when the total kind Of birds, in orderly array on wing, Came summon'd over Eden, to receive Their names of Thee. Milton's Paradise Lost.

That both are animalia, I grant; but not rationalia; For though they do agree in kind, Specifick difference we find. Hudibras.

God and Nature do not principally concern themselves in the preservation of particulars, but kinds and companies. South's Sermons.

He with his wife were only left behind Of perish'd man; they two were human kind. Dryden.

Some acts of virtue are common to Heathens and Christians; but I suppose them to be performed by Christians, after a more sublime manner than among the Heathens; and even when they do not differ in kind from moral virtues, yet differ in the degrees of perfection. Atturbury.

He, with a hundred arts refin'd, Shall stretch thy conquests over half the kind. Pope.

2. Particular nature.

No human laws are exempt from faults, since those that have been looked upon as most perfect in their kind, have been found to have so many. Baker.

Since in thy kindness my desires are crown'd. Prior.

Love and inclination can be produced only by an experience or opinion of kindness to us. Rogers's Sermons.

KI'NDRED. n. f. [from kind; cypene, Saxon.]

1. Relation by birth or marriage; cognation; consanguinity; affinity.

Like her, of equal kindred to the throne,
You keep her conquests, and extend your own. Dryden.

2. Relation; suit.

An old mothy saddle, and the stirrups of no kindred. Shak.

3. Relative.

I think there is no man secure
But the queen's kindred. Shakespeare's Richard III.
Nor needs thy juster title the foul guilt
Of Eastern kings, who, to secure their reign,
Must have their brothers, sons, and kindred slain. Denham.

KI'NDRED. adj. Congenial; related; cognate.

From Tulean Corium he claim'd his birth;
But after, when exempt from mortal earth,
From thence ascended to his kindred skies
A god. Dryden.

KINE. n. f. plur. from cow.

To milk the kine,
E'er the milk-maid fine
Hath open'd her eyne. Ben Jonson.

A field I went, amid' the morning dew,
To milk my kine. Gay.

KING. n. f. [A contraction of the Teutonic word unning, or cyning, the name of sovereign dignity. In the primitive tongue it signifies stout or valiant, the kings of most nations being, in the beginning, chosen by the people on account of their valour and strength. Verflegan.]

1. Monarch; supreme governor.

The great king of kings,
Hath in the table of his law commanded,
That thou shalt do no murder. Shakespeare, Rich. III.

A substitute shines brightly as a king,
Until a king be by; and then his state
Empties itself, as doth an inland brook
Into the main of waters. Shakespeare, Mer. of Venice.
True hope is swift, and flies with swallows wings;
Kings it make gods, and meaner creatures kings. Shakespeare.

The king becoming graces,
As justice, verity, temperance, stableness,
Bounty, perseverance, mercy, lowliness,
Devotion, patience, courage, fortitude,
I have no relish of them. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
Thus states were form'd; the name of king unknown,

'Till common int'rest plac'd the sway in one:

'Twas virtue only, or in arts of arms,
Diffusing blessings, or averting harms,
The same which in a fire the sons obey'd,
A prince the father of a people made. Pope.

2. It is taken by Bacon in the feminine; as prince also is.

Ferdinand and Isabella, kings of Spain, recovered the great and rich kingdom of Granada from the Moors. Bacon.

3. A card with the picture of a king.

The king unseen
Lurk'd in her hand, and mourn'd his captive queen. Pope.

4. KING at Arms, a principal officer at arms, that has the pre-eminence of the society; of whom there are three in number, viz. Garter, Norroy, and Clarendieux. Phillips.

A letter under his own hand was lately shew'd me by sir William Dugdale, king at arms. Walton.

TO KING. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To supply with a king. A word rather ludicrous.

England is so idly king'd,
Her sceptre so fantastically borne,
That fear attends her not. Shakespeare's Henry V.

2. To make royal; to raise to royalty.

Sometimes am I a king;
Then treason makes me wish myself a beggar,
And so I am: then crushing penury
Persuades me, I was better when a king;
Then am I king'd again. Shakespeare's Richard II.

KI'NGAPPLE. n. f. A kind of apple.

The kingapple is preferred before the jenneting. Mortimer.

KI'NGCRAFT. n. f. [king and craft.] The art of governing. A word commonly used by king James.

KI'NGCUP. n. f. [king and cup.] The name is properly, according to Gerard, kingcob. The flower, crowfoot.

June is drawn in a mantle of dark grass green, and upon his head a garland of bents, kingcups, and maidenhair. Peach.

Fair is the kingcup that in meadow blows,
Fair is the daisy that beside her grows. Gay.

KI'NGDOM. n. f. [from king.]

1. The dominion of a king; the territories subject to a monarch.

You're welcome,
Most learned, reverend sir, into our kingdom. Shakespeare.

Moses gave unto them the kingdom of Sihon, king of the Amorites, and the kingdom of Og, king of Bashan. Numb. xxxii.

2. A different class or order of beings. A word chiefly used among naturalists.

The animal and vegetable kingdoms are so nearly joined, that if you take the lowest of one, and the highest of the other, there will scarce be perceived any difference. Leche.

3. A region; a tract.

The wat'ry kingdom is no bar
To stop the foreign spirits; but they come,
As o'er a brook, to sea fair Portia. Shakespeare.

KI'NGFISHER. n. f. [halcyon.] A species of bird.

K I N

When dew refreshing on the pasture fields
The moon bestows, kingfishers play on shore. May's Virgil.

Bitterns, herons, sea-gulls, kingfishers, and water-rats, are great enemies to fish. Mortimer's Husb.

KI'NGLIKE. } adj. [from king.]
KI'NGLY. }

1. Royal; sovereign; monarchical.

There we'll sit Ruling in large and ample empery,
O'er France, and all her almost kingly dukedoms. Shakespeare.

Yet this place
Had been thy kingly seat, and here thy race,
From all the ends of peopled earth, had come To reverence thee. Dryden's State of Innocence.

In Sparta, a kingly government, though the people were perfectly free, the administration was in the two kings and the ephori. Swift.

The cities of Greece, when they drove out their tyrannical kings, either chose others from a new family, or abolished the kingly government, and became free states. Swift.

2. Belonging to a king; suitable to a king.

Why liest thou with the vile
In loathsome beds, and leav'st the kingly couch
A watch-case to a common 'larum bell? Shakespeare.
Then shalt thou give me with thy kingly hand,
What husband in thy power I will command. Shakespeare.

3. Noble; august; magnificent.

He was not born to live a subject life, each action of his bearing in it majesty, such a kingly entertainment, such a kingly magnificence, such a kingly heart for enterprizes. Sidney.

I am far better born than is the king;
More like a king, more kingly in my thoughts. Shakespeare.

KI'NGLY. adv. With an air of royalty; with superiour dignity.

Adam bow'd low; he, kingly, from his state Inclin'd not. Milton's Paradise Lost.

His hat, which never vail'd to human pride,
Walker with reverence took, and laid aside;
Low bow'd the rest, he, kingly, did but nod. Dunciad.

KINGSE'VIL. n. f. [king and evil.] A scrofulous distemper, in which the glands are ulcerated, commonly believed to be cured by the touch of a king.

Sore eyes are frequently a species of the kingsevil, and take their beginning from vicious humours inflaming the tunica adnata. Wise's Surgery.

KI'NGSHIP. n. f. [from king.] Royalty; monarchy.

They designed and proposed to me the new-modeling of sovereignty and kingship, without any reality of power, or without any necessity of subjection and obedience. King Charles.

We know how successful the late usurper was, while his army believed him real in his zeal against kingship; but when they found out the imposture, upon his aspiring to the same himself, he was presently deserted and opposed by them, and never able to crown his usurped greatness with the addition of that title which he passionately thirsted after. South.

KI'NGSPEAR. n. f. [asphodelus.] A plant.

KI'NGSTONE. n. f. [squatina.] A fish. Ainsworth.

KI'NSFOLK. n. f. [kin and folk.] Relations; those who are of the same family.

Those lords, since their first grants of those lands, have bestowed them amongst their kinsfolks. Spenser.

My kinsfolk have failed, and my familiar friends forgotten me. Job, xix. 14.

KI'NSMAN. n. f. [kin and man.] A man of the same race or family.

The jury he made to be chosen out of their nearest kinsmen, and their judges he made of their own fathers. Spenser.

Both fair, and both of royal blood they seem'd,
Whom kinsmen to the crown the heralds deem'd. Dryden.

Let

K I T

Let me stand excluded from my right, Robb'd of my kinsman's arms, who first appear'd in fight. Dryden's Fables.

There is a branch the Medicis in Naples: the head of it has been owned as a kinsman by the great duke, and 'tis thought will succeed to his dominions.
Addison on Italy.

KI'NSWOMAN. n. f. [kin and woman.] A female relation.

A young noble lady, near kinswoman to the fair
Helen, queen of Corinth, was come thither. Sidney.

The duke was as much in love with wit as he was with his kinswoman. Dennis's Letters.

KIRK. n. f. [cynce, Saxon; kyrkana.] An old word for a church, yet retained in Scotland.

Home they hasten the posts to dight,
And all the kirk pillars, ere day-light,
With hawthorn buds, and sweet eglantine. Spenser.
Nor is it all the nation frath these spots,
There is a church as well as kirk of Scots.
Cleaveland.

What one party thought to rivet by the Scots, that the other contemns, despising the kirk government and discipline of the Scots. King Charles.

KI'RTLE. n. f. [cynzel, Saxon.] An upper garment; a gown.

All in a kirtle of discoloured say
He clothed was. Fairy Queen.
What stuff wilt thou have a kirtle of? Thou shalt have a cap to-morrow.
Shakespeare's Henry IV.

Thy gowns, thy shoes, thy beds of roses,
Thy cap, thy kirtle, and thy posies,
Soon break, soon wither, soon forgotten,
In folly ripe, in reason rotten. Raleigh.

To KISS. v. a. [cusan, Welch; kyw.]

1. To touch with the lips.

But who those ruddy lips can kiss,
Which blessed still themselves do kiss. Sidney.
He took
The bride about the neck, and kiss her lips
With such a clamorous smack, that at the parting
All the church echo'd.
Shakespeare's Taming of the Shrew.

Their lips were four red roses on a stalk,
And in the summer beauty kiss'd each other.
Shakespeare.

2. To treat with fondness.

The hearts of Princes kiss obedience,
So much they love it; but to stubborn spirits,
They swell and grow as terrible as storms. Shakespeare.

3. To touch gently.

The moon shines bright: in such a night as this,
When the sweet wind did gently kiss the trees,
And they did make no noise.
Shakespeare. Merchant of Venice.

KISS. n. f. [from the verb.] Salute given by joining lips.

What sentie had I of her stol'n hours or lust?
I found not Cassio's kisses on her lips. Shak. Othello.
Upon my livid lips bestow a kiss:
O envy not the dead, they feel not bliss! Dryden.

KISSER. n. f. [from kiss.] One that kisses.

KISSINGCRUST. n. f. [kissing and crust.]

Crust formed where one loaf in the oven touches another.

These bak'd with kissingcrusts, and those Brought him small beer. King's Cookery.

KIT. n. f. [kitte, Dutch.]

1. A large bottle. Skinner.

2. A small diminutive fiddle.

'Tis kept in a case fitted to it, almost like a dancing-master's kit. Grew's Museum.

3. A small wooden vessel in which Newcastle salmon is sent up to town.

KITCHEN. n. f. [kegin, Welsh; keg, Flemish; cycene, Saxon; cuisine, French;
cucina, Italian; kyben, Erf.] The room in a house where the provisions are cooked.

VOL. I.

K I T

These being culpable of this crime, or favourers of their friends, which are such by whom their kitchens are sometimes amended, will not suffer any such statute to pass. Spenser.

Can we judge it a thing seemly for any man to go about the building of an house to the God of heaven, with no other appearance than if his end were to rear up a kitchen or a parlour for his own use.

He was taken into service in his court to a base office in his kitchen; so that he turned a brooch that had worn a crown. Hooker.

We see no new built palaces aspire,
No kitchens emulate the vestal fire. Bacon.

KI'TCHENGARDEN. n. f. [kitchen and garden.] Garden in which esculent plants are produced.

Gardens, if planted with such things as are fit for food, are called kitchengardens. Pope.

A kitchengarden is a more pleasant sight than the finest orangery. Bacon.

KI'TCHENMAID. n. f. [kitchen and maid.] A maid under the cookmaid, whose business is to clean the utensils of the kitchen.

KI'TCHENSTUFF. n. f. [kitchen and stuff.]
The fat of meat scummed off the pot, or gathered out of the dripping-pan.

As a thrifty wench scrapes kitchenstuff,
And barreling the droppings and the snuff
Of wasting candles, which in thirty year,
Reliquely kept, perchance buys wedding cheer. Speilator.

Instead of kitchenstuff some cry
Agospel-preaching ministry. Donne.

KI'TCHENWENCH. n. f. [kitchen and wench.] Sculliou; maid employed to clean the instruments of cookery.

Laura to his lady was but a kitchenwench. Shak.
Roasting and boiling leave to the kitchenwench. Swift.

Cookery; work done in the kitchen.

KITE. n. f. [cýza, Saxon; milvus.]

1. A bird of prey that infests the farms, and steals the chickens.

More pity that the eagle should be mew'd,
While kites, and buzzards prey at liberty. Shakespeare.

The heron, when she soareth high, so as sometimes she is seen to pass over a cloud, sheweth wings; but kites, flying aloft, shew fair and dry weather. Bacon.

A leopard and a cat seem to differ just as a kite doth from an eagle. Grew.

2. A name of reproach denoting rapacity.

Detested kite! thou liest. Shakespeare. King Lear.

3. A fictitious bird made of paper.

A man may have a great estate conveyed to him;
but if he will madly burn, or childishly make paper kites, of his deeds, he forfeits his title with his evidence. Government of the Tongue.

KI'TESFOOT. n. f. A plant. Ainsworth.

KI'TTEN. n. f. [katteken, Dutch. It is probable that the true singular is kit, the diminutive of cat, of which the old plural was kitten, or young cats, which was in time taken for the singular, like chicken.]
A young cat.

That a mare will sooner drown than an horse, is not experienced; nor is the same observed in the drowning of whelps and kittens. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

It was scratched in playing with a kitten. Wifeman.

Helen was just slept into bed;
Her eyebrows on the toilet lay,
Away the kitten with them fled,
As fees belonging to her prey. Prior.

To KI'TTEN. v. n. [from the noun.] To bring forth young cats.

So it would have done

K N A

At the same season, if your mother's cat
Had kitten'd, though yourself had ne'er been born.
Shakespeare.

The eagle timbered upon the top of high oak,
and the cat kittened in the hollow trunk of it.
L'Estrange.

To KCLICK. v. n. [from clack.]

1. To make a small sharp noise.

2. In Scotland it denotes to pilfer, or steal away suddenly with a snatch.

To KNAB. v. a. [knappen, Dutch; knaap, Erf.] To bite. Perhaps properly to bite something brittle, that makes a noise when it is broken; so that knab and knap
may be the same.

I had much rather lie knabbing crusts, without fear, in my own hole, than be mistress of the world with cares. L'Estrange.

An ass was wishing, in a hard Winter, for a little warm weather, and a mouthful of fresh grass to knab upon. L'Estrange.

To KNA'BBLE. v. n. [from knab.] To bite idly, or wantonly; to nibble. This word is found perhaps no where else.

Horses will knabble at walls and rails gnaw iron.
Brown.

KNACK. n. f. [cnappinge, skill, Saxon.]

1. A little machine; a pretty contrivance;
a toy.

When I was young, I was wont
To load my she with knacks: I would have ransack'd

The pedlar's silken treasury, and have pour'd it
To her acceptance. Shakespeare. Winter's Tale.

For thee, fond boy,
If I may ever know thou dost but sigh
That thou no more shalt see this knack, as never
I mean thou shalt, we'll bar thee from succession.
Shakespeare.

This cap was moulded on a porringer,
A velvet dish; fie, fie, 'tis lewd and filthy:
Why 'tis a cockle or a walnut shell,
A knack, a toy, a trick, a baby's cap. Shakespeare.
But is't not presumption to write verse to you,
Who make the better poems of the two?
For all these pretty knacks that you compose,
Alas! what are they but poems in prose! Denham.

He expounded both his pockets,
And found a watch, with rings and lockets;
A copper-plate, with almanacks
Engrav'd upon't, with other knacks. Hudibras.

2. A readiness; an habitual facility; a lucky dexterity.

I'll teach you the knacks

Of eating of flax
And out of their noses
Draw ribbands and posies. Ben Jonson's Gypsy.

The knack of fast and loose passes with foolish people for a turn of wit; but they are not aware all this while of the desperate consequences of an ill habit. L'Estrange.

There is a certain knack in conversation that gives a good grace by the manner and address. L'Estrange.

Knaves, who in full assemblies have the knack
Of turning truth to lies, and white to black. Dryden.

My author has a great knack at remarks: in the end he makes another about our refining in controversy, and coming nearer and nearer to the church of Rome. Atterbury.

The dean was famous in his time,
And had a kind of knack at rhyme. Swift.

3. A nice trick.

For how should equal colours do the knack?
Cameleons who can paint in white and black? Pope.

To KNACK. v. n. [from the noun.] To make a sharp quick noise, as when a stick breaks.

KNA'CKER. n. f. [from knack.]

1. A maker of small work.

One part for plow-right, knacker, and smith. Mortimer.

2. A rope-maker. [Reflio, Latin.] Ainsw.
6 X KNAG.

K N A

KNAG. n. s. [knag, a wart, Danish.] It is retained in Scotland. A hard knot in wood.

KNAGGY. adj. [from knag.] Knotty; set with hard rough knots.

KNAP. n. s. [cnap, Welsh, a protuberance, or a broken piece; cnap, Saxon, a protuberance.] A protuberance, a swelling prominence.

You shall see many fine seats set upon a knap of ground, environed with higher hills round about it, whereby the heat of the sun is pent in, and the wind gathered as in troughs. Bacon.

To KNAP. v. a. [knappen, Dutch.]

1. To bite; to break short.

He knappeth the spear in sunder. Common Prayer.
He will knapp the spears a-pieces with his teeth. More.

2. [Knaap, Erse.] To strike so as to make a sharp noise like that of breaking.

Knap a pair of tongs some depth in a vessel of water, and you shall hear the sound of the tongs. Bacon's Natural History.

To KNAP. v. n. To make a short sharp noise.

I reduced the shoulders so soon, that the standers-by heard them knapp in before they knew they were out. Wifeman.

KNAPBOTTLE. n. s. [papaver spumeum.]

A plant.

To KNAPPLE. v. n. [from knapp.] To break off with a sharp quick noise.

KNAPSACK. n. s. [from knappen, to eat.]

The bag which a soldier carries on his back; a bag of provisions.

The constitutions of this church shall not be repealed, 'till I see more religious motives than soldiers carry in their knapsacks. King Charles.

If you are for a merry jaunt, I'll try for once who can foot it farthest: there are hedges in Summer, and barns in Winter: I with my knapsack, and you with your bottle at your back: we'll leave honour to madmen, and riches to knaves, and travel till we come to the ridge of the world. Dryden.

KNAPWEED. n. s. [jacea, Latin.] A plant. Miller.

KNARE. n. s. [knor, German.] A hard knot.

A cake of scurf lies baking on the ground, And prickly stubs instead of trees are found; Or woods with knots and knares deform'd and old, Headless the most, and hideous to behold. Dryden.

KNAVE. n. s. [cnapa, Saxon.]

1. A boy; a male child.

2. A servant. Both these are obsolete.

For as the moon the eye doth please
With gentle beams not hurting sight,
Yet hath fir sun the greater praise,
Because from him doth come her light;
So if my man must praises have,
What then must I that keep the knave. Sidney.

He eats and drinks with his domestick slaves;
A verier hind than any of his knaves. Dryden.

3. A petty rascal; a scoundrel; a dishonest fellow.

Most men rather brook their being reputed knaves, than for their honesty be accounted fools; knave, in the mean time, passing for a name of credit. South.
When both plaintiff and defendant happen to be crafty knaves, there's equity against both. L'Estrange.

An honest man may take a knave's advice;
But idiots only may be cozen'd twice. Dryden.

See all our fools aspiring to be knaves. Pope.

4. A card with a soldier painted on it.

For 'twill return, and turn i' account,
If we are brought in play upon't,
Or but by casting knave got in,
What pow'r can hinder us to win! Hudibras.

KNAVEY. n. s. [from knave.]

1. Dishonesty; tricks; petty villainy.

K N E

Here's no knavery! See to beguile the old folks, how the young folks lay their heads together. Shakespeare.

If I thought it were not a piece of honesty to acquaint the king withal, I would do it, I hold it the more knavery to conceal it. Shakespeare. Winter's Tale.

The cunning courtier should be slighted too,
Who with dull knavery makes so much ado;
'Till the shrewd fool by thriving too too fast,
Like Ariop's fox becomes a prey at last. Dryden.

2. Mischievous tricks or practices. In the following passage it seems a general term for any thing put to an ill use, or perhaps of trifling things of more cost and use.

We'll reveal it as bravely as the best,
'With amber bracelets, beads, and all this knave'ry. Shakespeare.

KNAVEISH. adj. [from knave.]

1. Dishonest; wicked; fraudulent.

'Tis foolish to conceal it at all, and knaveish to do it from friends. Pope's Letters.

2. Waggish; mischievous.

Here she comes curst and sad;
Cupid is a knaveish lad,
Thus to make poor females mad. Shakespeare.

KNAVEISHLY. adv. [from knaveish.]

1. Dishonestly; fraudulently.

2. Waggishly; mischievously.

To KNEAD. v. a. [cnadan, Saxon; kneaden, Dutch] To beat or mingle any stuff or substance. It is seldom applied in popular language but to the act of making bread.

Here's yet in the word hereafter, the kneading, the making of the cakes, and the heating of the oven. Shakespeare.

It is a lump, where all beasts kneaded be,
Wisdom makes him an ark, where all agree. Donne.
'Thus kneaded up with milk the new-made man
His kingdom o'er his kindred world began;
'Till knowledge misapply'd misunderstood,
And pride of empire, sour'd his balmy blood. Dryden.

One paste of flesh on all degrees bestow'd,
And kneaded up alike with moist'ning blood. Dryden.

Prometheus, in the kneading up of the heart, seasoned it with some furious particles of the lion. Addison's Spectator.

No man ever reapt his corn,
Or from the oven drew his bread,
Ere hinds and bakers yet were born,
That taught them both to sow and knead. Prior.
The cake she kneaded was the fav'ry meat. Prior.

KNEADINGTROUGH. n. s. [knead and trough.] A trough in which the paste of bread is worked together.

Frogs shall come into thy kneadingtroughs. Exodus.

KNEE. n. s. [cneop, Saxon; knee, Dutch.]

1. The joint of the leg where the leg is joined to the thigh.

Thy royal father
Was a most sainted king: the queen that bore thee,
Often upon her knees than on her feet,
Died every day she liv'd. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
Scotch skink is a kind of strong nourishment, made of the knees and sinews of beef long boiled. Bacon.

I beg and clasp thy knees.
Wearied with length of ways, worn out with toil,
To lay down and leaning on her knees,
Invok'd the cause of all her miseries;
And cast her languishing regards above,
For help from Heav'n, and her ungrateful Jove. Dryden.

2. A knee is a piece of timber growing crooked, and so cut that the trunk and branch make up an angle. Maxon's Mech. Exer.

K N E

Such dispositions are the fittest timber to make great politicks of: like to knee timber, that is good for ships that are to be tossed; but not for building houses, that shall stand firm. Bacon.

To KNEE. v. a. [from the noun.] To supplicate by kneeling.

Go you that banish'd him, a mile before his tent fall down, and knee the way into his mercy. Shakespeare. Coriolanus.

Return with her!

Why, the hot blooded France, that dow'dless took Our youngest born: I could as well be brought To knee his throne, and squire-like pension beg. Shakespeare.

KNEED. adj. [from knee.]

1. Having knees: as in-kneed, or out-kneed.

2. Having joints: as kneed grass.

KNEEDEEP. adj. [knee and deep.]

1. Rising to the knees.

2. Sunk to the knees.

The country peasant meditates no harm,
When clad with skins of beasts to keep him warm;
In winter weather unconcern'd he goes,
Almost kneedeep, through mire in clumsy shoes. Dryden.

KNE'EDGRASS. n. s. [gramen geniculatum.] An herb.

KNE'EHOLM. n. s. [aquifolium.] An herb Ainsworth.

KNE'EPAN. n. s. [knee and pan.] A little round bone about two inches broad, pretty thick, a little convex on both sides, and covered with a smooth cartilage on its fore-side. It is soft in children, but very hard in those of riper years: it is called patella or mola. Over it passes the tendon of the muscles which extend the leg, to which it serves as a pulley. Quincy.

The kneapan must be shewn, with the knitting thereof, by a fine shadow underneath the joint. Pratham on Drawing.

To KNEEL. v. n. [from knee.] To perform the act of genuflection; to bend the knee.

When thou do'st ask me blessing, I'll kneel down,
And ask of thee forgiveness. Shakespeare's King Lear.

Ere I was risen from the place that shew'd
My duty kneeling, came a reeking post,
Stew'd in his hate, half breathing, panting forth
From Goneril, his mistress, salutation. Shakespeare.

A certain man kneeling down to him, said, Lord, have mercy upon my son; for he is lunatick. Matt. xviii. 14.

Should bleed upon a barbarous knife.

Craslow.

The sacred priests with ready knives bereave
The beast of life, and in full bowls receive
The streaming blood.

Dryden's Æn.

Ev'n in his sleep he starts, and fears the knife,
And, trembling, in his arms takes his accomplice wife.

Dryden.

Pain is not in the knife that cuts us: but we call it cutting in the knife, and pain only in ourselves.

Watts.

KNIGHT. n. f. [cnibt, Sax. knecht, Germ. a servant or pupil.]

1. A man advanced to a certain degree of military rank. It was anciently the custom to knight every man of rank or fortune, that he might be qualified to give challenges, to fight in the lists, and to perform feats of arms. In England knight-hood confers the title of sir: as, sir Thomas, sir Richard. When the name was not known, it was usual to say sir knight.

That same knight's own sword this is of yore,
Which Merlin made.

Spenser.

Sir knight, if knight thou be,
Abandon this forestalled place.

Spenser.

When every case is law is right,
No squire in debt, and no poor knight.

Shakespeare. King Lear.

This knight; but yet why should I call him knight?

To give impiety to this rev'rent sir?
No squire with knight did better fit

Daniel.

In parts, in manners, and in wit.

Hudibras.

2. Shakespeare uses it of a female, and it must therefore be understood in its original meaning, pupil or follower.

Pardon, goddess of the night,
Those that flew thy virgin knight;
For the which, with songs of woe,
Round about her tomb they go.

Shakespeare.

3. A champion.

He suddenly unties the poke,
Which out of it sent such a smoke,
As ready was them all to choke,
So grievous was the pother;
So that the knights each other lost,
And stood as still as any post.

Drayton.

Did I for this my country bring
To help their knight against their king,
And raise the first sedition?

Denham.

KNIGHT Errant. [chevalier errant.] A wandering knight; one who went about in quest of adventures.

Like a bold knight errant did proclaim Combat to all, and bore away the dame.

Denham.

The ancient errant knights
Won all their mistresses in fights;
They cut whole giants into fritters,
To put them into am'rous twitters.

Hudibras.

KNIGHT Errantry. [from knight errant.] The character or manners of wandering knights.

That which with the vulgar passes for courage is a brutish sort of knight errantry, seeking out needless encounters.

Morris.

Sidney.

How darest your pride presume against my laws:

As in a listed field to fight your cause:

Unask'd the royal grant, no marshal by,

As knighly rites require, nor judge to try.

Dryden.

KNIGHTHOOD. n. f. [from knight.] The character or dignity of a knight.

The sword which Merlin made,
For that his nourling, when he knighthood swore,
Therewith to doen his foes eternal smart.

Fairy Queen.

Speak truly on thy knighthood, and thine oath,
And so defend thee Heaven and thy valour.

Shakespeare.

Is this the sir, who some waste wife to win,
A knighthood bought, to go a-wooing in?

Ben Jonson.

If you needs must write, write Caesar's praise,
You'll gain at least a knighthood or the bays.

Pope.

KNIGHTLESS. adj. [from knight.] Unbecoming a knight. Obsolete.
